PREFACE

1. In the first two chapters of Turkish and Mongolian Studies, Royal Asiatic Society Prize Publication Fund, vol. XX, London, 1962 (hereafter referred to as Studies), I gave a brief sketch of the history of the Turkish peoples and of their languages from the earliest period (the eighth century A.D.) at which they become directly known to us down to the medieval period, and attempted to identify and name the various dialects and languages which evolved during that period.

2. The broad thesis of this sketch was that a unitary Turkish language, which was not genetically connected with any other language known to us, and specifically not connected genetically with the Mongolian and Tungus languages, took shape, almost certainly in the steppe country to the west and north of the Great Wall of China, at some date which we cannot now determine, but certainly long before the start of the Christian era; that this unitary language split into two main branches, 'standard Turkish' and 'I/r Turkish', not later than, and perhaps before, the beginning of the Christian era; and that during the first millennium A.D. standard Turkish slowly broke up into two or three dialects, which soon became independent languages. No substantial early texts of any form of I/r Turkish have survived, but there are in Chinese historical works a few words of Tavğaç, the language of the Turkish tribe called by the Chinese T'o-pa, who were the ruling element in the Chinese Northern, or Yüan, Wei dynasty (A.D. 386-535), and there are some Turkish loan-words in Mongolian and Hungarian which were almost certainly borrowed from an I/r language, by the Mongols probably in the fifth or sixth centuries, and by the Hungarians probably in the ninth. The slight remains of Proto-Bulgar are in a similar language and so too are a few funerary inscriptions of the Volga Bulgars of the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries. The material is, however, very scanty and I have made only a few references herein to words in I/r Turkish, and those mainly where the only surviving I/r language, Chuvash (Çuv.), throws light on the phonetic structure of individual standard Turkish words. These citations are from N. I. Ashmarin, Thesaurus linguae Tschuvaschorum, 17 vols., Kazan-Cheboksary, 1928-50, cited as Ash. followed by the volume and page.

3. As I pointed out in Studies, p. 53, an essential basis for any scientific study of the comparative etymology of the Turkish languages is a list of all genuine Turkish words which are known to have existed before the various medieval Turkish languages were subjected to a mass invasion of loan-words from the languages of the foreign peoples (mainly Arabs, Iranians, and later Mongols) with whom the Turkish peoples then came into contact. The present work contains just such a list. I have endeavoured to include in it all the words known to have existed in the earliest known standard Turkish languages, that is Türkü, Uyğur, including Uyğur-A, Old Kırğız, Xākāni, Oğuz, Kıpçak, and some minor dialects, prior to the Mongolian invasion at the beginning of the thirteenth century, excluding, except in a few special cases, words borrowed directly or indirectly from the Indian, Iranian, and Semitic languages. All references to 'early Turkish' and 'the early period' relate to the Turkish languages as we know them in the eighth to twelfth centuries inclusive.

4. One of the special characteristics of the Turkish languages is the manner in which derived words are constructed from the basic words of the language by a process of attaching suffixes to them. It is important, therefore, not merely to compile a bare list of these early words and their meanings, but also to indicate what kind of words they are (nouns, verbs, adverbs, etc.), verbs being distinguished from the rest by the attachment of a hyphen, e.g. at (noun) 'a horse', at- (verb) 'to throw', and in addition, in the case of derived words, to analyse their structure and indicate from what basic words they were derived, since this often explains their semantic evolution. This is all the more important since, even at the earliest date at which it becomes known to us, Turkish had already had a long history, in the course of which some basic words had already become obsolete, leaving the words derived from them, so to speak, 'in the air', with no obvious origin; on this point see, for example, Studies, pp. 140 ff. In giving these morphological explanations I have used the grammatical terminology customary among English scholars of Turkish, eschewing the new terminologies which are now taking shape in some academic circles.

5. My second purpose has been to establish the original meanings of all words in the list and trace their subsequent semantic evolution by illustrating each word by a quotation, or series of quotations, of passages in early texts in which they occur. For this purpose I have examined all the surviving texts in the languages enumerated above to which I have been able to obtain access. These texts are enumerated in paras. 20-6 below.

6. The only words which have been included in the list without at least one such quotation are a few which can first be traced in an actual Turkish text only in the medieval period, that is during the thirteenth to sixteenth centuries inclusive, but which demonstrably existed at an earlier period for such reasons as that they exist both in standard Turkish and in Chuvash (in a distinctive form peculiar to that language) so that they must already have existed before the split between standard and I/r Turkish, or that words derived from them are attested in the early period, or that they occur as loan-words in foreign languages in forms which indicate that they must have been borrowed in, or before, the early period. The texts which have survived from the early period are of course only a fraction of those which once existed and there are no doubt other words which existed in the early period but do not happen to occur in the texts which have survived. Some of these words occur in medieval texts or still exist in modern Turkish languages, but I have not attempted to identify and include them in the list, since the evidence that they were really early words is lacking.

7. A surprisingly large number of early words are hapax legomena (Hap. leg.), that is, occur only once, and have not so far been discovered elsewhere; they have, however, been included in the list because they seem to be genuine Turkish words and may later be discovered elsewhere; but the fact that they are Hap. leg. makes it impossible to determine whether they are correctly transcribed. Properly speaking the term implies one single occurrence, but it has been stretched to include verbs listed in Kaş. with an enumeration of the Perf., Aor., and Infin. forms, since experience shows that if a word is mis-spelt in the Perf. it may also be mis-spelt in the Aor. and Infin.

8. When an early word has survived into the medieval period, I have also added a selection of quotations from the texts enumerated in paras. 27-52, and when it still survives in one or more modern languages I have usually recorded this fact also. There are two reasons for doing this: the first is that evidence of this kind is often required to fix the exact meaning and pronunciation of the word in the early period; the second is that, as I understand it, the main purpose of compiling a dictionary of this kind is not only to help students to read and understand the meaning of early texts, but also to provide a solid basis for the etymological dictionaries of medieval and modern Turkish languages which are now being compiled or will be compiled in future. I must, however, make it clear that my quotations from medieval texts and enumerations of modern languages in which a word survives do not profess to be as comprehensive as the quotations from early texts.

THE SYSTEM OF TRANSCRIPTION

9. The problems of transcribing early Turkish texts are discussed at length in Studies, Chap. 3 and elsewhere, and it is unnecessary to cover the whole ground again. There is, of course, no means of discovering exactly how Turkish was pronounced between 900 and 1200 years ago; the alphabets employed are all to a greater or less degree unscientific; the most that can be achieved is a broad system of transcription which will give an approximate idea of the pronunciation of the words concerned in the languages enumerated in para. 3. The transcription alphabet which I suggested in Studies and which is used here can best be described as the official alphabet of the Turkish Republic with one minor modification (regarding the use of ğ and ğ) and a few extra letters to represent sounds which either do not exist in Republican Turkish (Rep. Turkish) or, if they exist, are not represented by a distinctive letter. This alphabet was selected on the basis that the phonetic structure of early Turkish was probably much the same as that of Rep. Turkish, apart from certain sounds for which special letters have been provided. These sounds can be tabulated as follows:

10. Vowels. There are four back and five front vowels, all of which may be either short or long. The only additional letter is é for close e, a sound which certainly existed in early Turkish and still survives at any rate in some dialects of Rep. Turkish.

Back	{ short a i o u long a: ɪ: o: u:
Front	{ short e é i ö ü long e: é: i: ö: ü:

These are arranged, when circumstances demand it, in the following order: a, a:, e, e:, é, é:, ɪ, ɪ:, i, i:, o, o:, u, u:, ö, ö:, ü, ü:; note that u, u: precede ö, ö:. The round vowels represent a range of sounds which merge imperceptibly into one another in the various languages.

In most, but not all, modern languages the vowels o and ö occur only in first syllables of words, but there is good evidence, which I assembled in 'Three Notes on Early Turkish', Türk Dili Araştırmaları Yıllığı, 1966, pp. 1 ff., that they were also used in the second and later syllables of many words in early Turkish. This evidence is, however, too fragmentary and imperfect, and in some cases too inconsistent, to justify restoring such spellings at the beginning of all the entries concerned. I have therefore entered all these words in the conventional spelling with u/ü in the second and later syllables. Where there is good evidence in regard to individual words that these vowels were originally o/ö I have entered these spellings in brackets, e.g. törü: (törö:), but I must emphasize that these sounds occurred in far more words than are singled out for this treatment, for example, in all words with the Suffix -uk/-ük (-ok/-ök).

11. Consonants. The conclusion reached in Studies was that the sounds which existed in early Turkish can be tabulated as follows, v. representing voiced and u. unvoiced sounds:

	Plosive		Fricative		Nasal	Affricate		Sibilant		Semi-vowel
	v.	u.	v.	u.	v.	v.	u.	v.	u.	v.
Labial	b	p	v	(f)	m					(w)
Dental	d	t	ɖ		n			z	s
Denti-palatal						c	ç
Palatal					ɲ			(j)	ş	y
Post-palatal	g	k	?		ŋ
Velar	?	k	g	x	ŋ

Liquids (v.) l r (Aspirate (u.) h)

The post-palatal sounds occur only in association with front vowels and the velar sounds only in association with back vowels, so only one letter, k, is required to represent both unvoiced plosives. The unvoiced labial fricative f probably did not exist in early Turkish as an independent sound, but seems to have arisen as a secondary form of v in association with some unvoiced sounds. The voiced palatal sibilant probably did not exist as an independent sound in early Turkish, but is noted as a secondary sound in one or two words containing ç, e.g. çöj- probably for çöz-. It also occurred in a few Sogdian loan-words, e.g. a:ju:n, and a few other words, e.g. üjme:, which are probably, but not demonstrably, Sogdian loan-words. The labial semi-vowel w was not a native Turkish sound, but evolved as a secondary form of v in one or two languages like early Oğuz and also occurred in some loan-words. The voiced post-palatal ğ was normally a plosive, but may in certain positions have been a fricative; conversely the voiced velar ğ was normally a fricative but may in certain positions have been a plosive. The unvoiced velar fricative x probably did not exist as an independent sound in early Turkish, but seems to have arisen as a secondary form of k in association with some sounds, and also occurred in a few loan-words, some of them very old like xağan and xan. Kāşğarī says that the simple aspirate h was not a native Turkish sound but occurred in some 'impure' dialects and in one or two words like ühī: in which it seems to be a secondary form of ğ.

The consonants are arranged, when the circumstances demand it, in the following order: b, p, v, (f), (w); c, ç, j; d, đ, t; ğ, (velar) k, x; g, (post-palatal) k, (h); l; m; n, ŋ, ñ; r; s; ş; y; z. Note that the letters are arranged in classes, and not in the normal conventional order, but that the first letters of the classes are arranged in the conventional order.

12. There are some particular difficulties in transcribing some early languages, of which the following are the most important:

(1) In Türkü there was a tendency towards dissimilation, so that when a suffix beginning alternatively with a voiced or unvoiced consonant like the Perf. suffix -dī:/-tī:/-dī:/-tī: was attached to a verb ending in a consonant, the unvoiced form was attached to a voiced consonant and vice versa, e.g. erti:, tapdī:. In Xak. the position tended to be exactly the opposite, at any rate to the extent that suffixes with voiced initials were attached to verbs ending with voiced consonants, e.g. erdi:, although cases of suffixes with voiced initials being attached to verbs ending in unvoiced consonants are very common, at any rate in our manuscript of Kaş. Chronologically speaking Uyg. lay squarely between Türkü and Xak. but nearly all the alphabets in which it is written are so ambiguous that it is quite uncertain whether it was a dissimilating language like the former or an assimilating language like the latter, or whether the change took place at some date between the eighth and eleventh centuries. I cannot therefore claim to have been in the least consistent in transcribing Uyg. texts, usually following the scriptions in the published texts.

(2) The Runic alphabet (see Studies, pp. 51 ff.) in which nearly all the Türkü texts have survived, the Manichaean Syriac alphabet, and the Brāhmī alphabet had different letters for b and p and for ğ and post-palatal k, the other early alphabets did not, and the Brāhmī spellings are very erratic; there is indeed some doubt regarding the phonetic value of some of the letters of this alphabet in its Central Asiatic form. It is therefore almost impossible to decide how some words should be transcribed. In some cases assistance can be got from the modern languages, but some of these have undergone quite considerable phonetic changes.

(3) Only one of the alphabets concerned, Brāhmī, had separate letters for o, u, ö and ü, and the spellings of the texts in this alphabet are often inconsistent. In this case, however, the correct form can often be established if the word was a loan-word in Mongolian, or survives in modern languages; but the spellings in modern languages are often inconsistent, particularly as between languages in the Oğuz group and the rest.

13. The alphabet set out above has also been used for transcribing (or perhaps it would be more accurate to say transliterating, since the system adopted is purely mechanical) quotations from Arabic and Persian texts, with the addition of the following letters: ṭ, ḍ, ṭ, ḥ, ṣ, and ẓ, hamza, 'ayn' and q for the unvoiced velar plosive, which must be distinguished from the unvoiced post-palatal plosive in these languages. In these languages, too, vowel length is indicated in the usual manner by a superscribed line, e.g. ā. The same letters are also used to transcribe Mongolian, but Sanskrit is transcribed in the conventional way.

THE ARRANGEMENT OF WORDS IN THE DICTIONARY

14. As pointed out above, the Turkish texts quoted in this book are written in a variety of alphabets, all more or less ambiguous, and it is often impossible to determine the correct transcription of a number of words; moreover, some words were pronounced slightly differently in different languages. It would, therefore, not be sensible to arrange the words in the strict alphabetical order to which we are accustomed in the dictionaries of European languages, since this would involve a great many double or multiple entries and greatly add to the difficulty of finding individual words. This problem and the means of solving it are discussed in detail in Studies, Chap. 4. The arrangement which emerged from this discussion can be summarized as follows:

(1) The words are broken down into fourteen groups, containing respectively words beginning with the following sounds:

(a) vowels	(h) m
(b) labial plosives (b , (p))	(i) n
(c) denti-palatal affricate (ç)	(j) r
(d) dental plosives (t , (d))	(k) s
(e) velar plosives (k , (x))	(l) ş
(f) post-palatal plosives (k , (ğ))	(m) y
(g) l	(n) z

(2) Each of these fourteen groups is divided into sub-groups; in each case the first sub-group contains monosyllables ending in an open vowel; the order of the remainder is determined in the case of the first group (words beginning with vowels) by the first consonant, and, if there is one, the second consonant or failing that the final vowel, if any, and in the case of other groups by the second consonant, and the third consonant, if any, or failing that the final vowel, if any. For purposes of classification these are the only significant sounds; vowels other than initial and final vowels are disregarded except for purposes of arranging the order of the words in a sub-group.

15. Each sub-group is identified by from one to three code letters representing the significant sounds enumerated above, the code letters being as follows:

- A, or if one of the significant sounds is post-palatal g or k, E, representing vowels.
- B representing labials, b, p, v, (f), (w) but not m.
- C representing denti-palatal affricates c, ç, (j).
- D representing dentals d, đ, t but not n.
- Ĝ representing velars ğ, k, x but not ŋ.
- G representing post-palatals g, k, (h) but not ŋ.
- L representing l.
- M representing m.
- N representing n, ŋ, ñ.
- R representing r.
- S representing s.
- Ş representing ş.
- Y representing y.
- Z representing z.

Each sub-group is divided into the following parts:

- (1) monosyllables, if any, coded as Mon.
- (2) monosyllabic verbs, if any, coded as Mon. V.
- (3) disyllables, coded as Dis.
- (4) disyllabic verbs, coded as Dis. V.
- (5) longer words, coded as Tris.
- (6) longer verbs, coded as Tris. V.

16. In order to locate a word in the dictionary:

- (1) declensional and conjugational suffixes must be removed;
- (2) the part in which it appears in the dictionary must be determined by converting the significant sounds in it into the appropriate code letters, account being taken of the fact whether it is either a verb or not a verb, e.g.:

u:	Mon. A
u:-	Mon. V. A-
ak, oğ, u:ğ, ok	Mon. AĞ
eg-, ek-, öğ-, ük-	Mon. V. EG-
bu:	Mon. BA

çars	Mon. CRS
tüpi:, töpü:	Dis. DBA
tapın-, tevin-	Dis. V. DBN-
tügü:nük	Tris. DGN
tıltağlığ	Tris. DLD
yarlıka:-	Tris. V. YRL-

17. Within each part of a sub-group the words are arranged in the following order, which is designed to make it as easy as possible to locate a word written in any of the various scripts:

(1) in Mon. and Mon. V. in the alphabetical order of the vowel, and when two or more words have the same vowel (o and u, and ö and ü, respectively being regarded as identical since they are not distinguished in these scripts) in the order of the final consonants; thus in Mon. V. AD- the order is ad-, at-, ét-, ı:d-, it-, u:d-, ut-, ü:d-, öt-, üt-.

(2) in Dis. and Dis. V.,

(a) all words ending in a closed syllable precede those ending in an open vowel, thus in Dis. V. ADL- ütül- precedes atla:-;

(b) if two words contain, in addition to the letters represented in the heading, further consonants belonging to different classes, these determine their order; thus in Dis. V. SCD- sıçtur- precedes saçtaş-;

(c) in other cases, subject to (a) above, the order is determined by the first vowel; thus under Dis. V. SCD- the order is saçıt-, sıçıt-, suçıt-, süçıt-, and under Dis. V. ADL- atla:-, eđle:-, or, if the vowels are identical, by the order of the consonants following, thus under Dis. V. ADL- ođul, uđul-, otul-.

(3) in Tris. and Tris. V. the same principles are observed, mutatis mutandis.

18. Most words in the dictionary are preceded by code letters in capitals, only basic words of which the pronunciation is reasonably certain not being preceded by one. These letters have the following meaning:

(1) C compound; used when a word is composed of two shorter words, e.g. C ıçkur 'belt', composed of ıç and kur. Such words are rare.

(2) D Derived; placed before every word other than a compound which is not a basic word, e.g. D evdil-, the Passive form of evdi:-.

(3) F Foreign; placed before words which are known to be loan-words, e.g. F a:ju:n borrowed from Sogdian. Words which are believed to be loan-words are preceded by ?F if definite proof is lacking.

(4) PU Pronunciation uncertain; see (6).

(5) S Secondary; placed before words which are secondary forms of other words in the list; such words are followed by a reference to the words of which they are the secondary forms.

(6) VU Vocalization uncertain. This prefix is used when the vocalization of a word is uncertain but there is no doubt about its consonantal structure, e.g.

VU eteç indicates that this is the most probable pronunciation of the word but that it might be ataç, atiç, atuç, etc. Words are preceded by PU when there is some doubt about the pronunciation of one or more consonants in them whether or not the vocalization is certain.

(7) When a word is known to have existed at an earlier date but was already obsolete by the eighth century so that it is known only from its derivatives the basic word is entered with a preceding asterisk and followed by cross-references to some of the words derived from it, e.g. 1 ad-*, see adın, adır-.

(8) E Erroneous; unfortunately a few completely non-existent words have found their way into some medieval and modern dictionaries and word-lists owing to misreadings of ancient texts. A small selection of these is included in the list, preceded by E and followed by an explanation, in order to indicate that such words really did not exist and have not merely been overlooked, e.g. E amuç which arises from an erroneous scription of the Arabic word aṣahh in the manuscript of Kaş.

AUTHORITIES QUOTED, WITH SHORT TITLES

I. EARLY TEXTS

19. All quotations in the paragraphs about individual words are preceded by the name of the language in which they were written and the date of composition expressed in centuries denoted by roman numerals: VIII = eighth century A.D. and so on. When two or more quotations are taken from the same language they are grouped under a single head, possibly with different chronological indications.

A. Türkü

20. Two periods are distinguished:

(1) VIII. Several major inscriptions in the Runic alphabet fall under this heading; there is a brief note on the best editions of them in Studies, p. 68, but my own quotations are derived, wherever possible, from a personal examination of the photographs and squeezes of the inscriptions. As a result in one or two cases I have, I think, found better readings of some difficult passages than those in any of the editions; examples will be found under olğurt-, berüki, sın-. In addition to the major inscriptions listed separately below there are some shorter inscriptions, but as they are undated and may be later than VIII they are included under the next heading. The major inscriptions are the following:

(a) the funerary inscription of Toñukuk (this is the customary transcription of the name but it is VU) composed probably in the second, but possibly the third decade of VIII; cited as T followed by the number of the line;

(b) the funerary inscription of Kül Tégin, composed in A.D. 732, cited as I followed by the side (E, W, N, S) of the stone and the line on the side;

(c) the funerary inscription of Bilge: Xağan, composed in A.D. 735, cited as II similarly followed;

(d) the funerary inscription of the Küli Çors at Ixe-Xuşotu in central Mongolia, roughly contemporary with the preceding, cited as Ix. followed by the line;

(e) the relatively brief inscription at Ongin, cited as Ongin followed by the line.

(2) VIII ff. Under this heading are included texts which may have been composed in VIII, but were possibly, in some cases probably, composed in IX, or perhaps in one or two cases even later. These fall under the following heads:

(a) a few minor inscriptions from Mongolia, of which the most convenient editions are those in the second volume of H. N. Orkun, Eski Türk Yazıtları, 3 volumes and index, Istanbul, 1936-41, (cited as ETY followed by the volume in roman and the page in arabic figures). These are occasionally cited under the names given in that volume followed by a reference to ETY II;

(b) those of the so-called Yeniseian (Yen.) inscriptions which were found in Khakassia and were probably erected by minor Western Türkü chieftains who escaped to Khakassia after the fall of the Türkü empire in the middle of VIII, see Studies, p. 69. The most convenient edition is that in S. Ye. Malov, Yeniseiskaya pi'smennost' tyurkov, Moscow, 1952; they are cited as Mal. followed by the number of the inscription and the line, but my readings sometimes differ from Malov's;

(c) a few inscriptions found at Ayrтам Oy near the town of Talas on the river of the same name and probably datable to IX or X (see Studies, pp. 72 and 256). The texts are almost illiterate and in a deplorable state, and I have quoted them only occasionally, citing them as Talas followed by the number of the inscription and the line;

(d) paper manuscripts in the Runic alphabet. The only substantial one is a book of divination called Irĥ Bitig, which I cite as Irĥ B followed by the number of the paragraph and not, as has usually been done, by the page, since the page numbers used do not correspond to those of the actual manuscript. The most convenient edition of the rest, which are rather miscellaneous in character, is in ETY II, but as Orkun's system of references is rather chaotic I have substituted my own, followed by a reference to the page in ETY II. It is commonly believed that these documents can be dated to about IX;

(e) Manichaean (Man.) texts in the Manichaean Syriac or Uyğur alphabets and what Prof. A. von Gabain in her Alltürkische Grammatik, Leipzig, 1941, p. 5 (cited as v. G. ATG) called 'the N-dialect', but which seems in fact, see Studies, p. 118, to be Türkü written in a non-Runic alphabet. The longest and most important of these texts is the 'Confession of Sins' known as the Chuas-tuanift (more correctly Xwästwanëft). The best manuscript, almost complete, is in the British Museum, and there are other fragments, some of the beginning of the text missing in that manuscript, in Germany. The most convenient edition, with a facsimile of the B.M. manuscript, is still that by A. von Le Coq in JRAS 1911, pp. 279 ff., although the translation is not entirely accurate. I cite it as Chuas. followed by the line of the B.M. manuscript or, in the case of the first part, as Chuas. I followed by the line in von Le Coq's numeration. The other Manichaean Türkü texts which I quote have all been published in the Abhandlungen or Sitzungsberichte of the Academy of Sciences in Berlin (originally the Königliche preussische, later Preussische, and later still Deutsche, Akademie der Wissenschaften). As these publications also contain Manichaean texts in Uyğur and Uyğur-A it is more convenient to list all the publications of Manichaean texts here to avoid additional references in subsequent paragraphs. The main bulk of them is in A. von Le Coq's Türkische Manichaica aus Chotscho I (AKPAW, 1912); II (APAW, 1919); III (APAW, 1922), cited as MI, II, and III followed by the page and line, the last followed by (i), (ii), etc. if the same line number appears more than once on the same page. Others were published in a series called Türkische Turfantexte (cited as TT), edited at one time or another by W. Bang, A. von Gabain, and G. R. Rachmati (later R. R. Arat), which also contains Uyğur Buddhist and Civil texts. Those parts which contain Manichaean texts (mostly not in Manichaean Türkü) are TT II (SPAW, 1929) cited by page and line, and TT III (SPAW, 1930) and TT IX (ADAW, 1958) both in Uyğur and cited by line. Other short Manichaean texts are in A. von Le Coq, Ein manichäisch-ugurisches Fragment aus Idiqt-Schachri (SKPAW, 1908) cited as Man.-ug. Frag. followed by page and line, and W. Bang and A. von Gabain, Ein ugurisches Fragment über den manichäischen Windgott (Ungarische Jahrbücher VIII, pp. 247 ff.), cited as Wind. followed by the line.

B. Uyğur and Uyğur-A (Uyğ. and Uyğ.-A)

21. The reasons for supposing that two separate, but closely related, Uyğ. dialects existed are stated in Studies, p. 42. There are obvious traces of Uyğ.-A in some Buddhist texts, e.g. those in TT VI and TM IV (although it is stated in the introduction to the latter that the Uyğ.-A forms had been 'corrected' in the transcription so that they are no longer apparent), but such texts do not seem to be entirely homogeneous, so that it is only in the Manichaean texts that it seems possible more or less to isolate the two dialects. Three periods can be distinguished:

(1) VIII. The earliest and most substantial Uyğ. inscription in the Runic alphabet is that situated at Şine-usu in Outer Mongolia, which is the funerary monument of an Uyğur Xağan who ruled from A.D. 746 to 759. It is cited as Su. followed by the side and line on the side.

(2) IX. The second such inscription, only fragments of the Uyğ. text of which still survive, is the funerary memorial at Kara Balgasun of an Uyğur Xağan who probably ruled from A.D. 808 to 821. It is cited as III followed by a letter and line and a reference to ETY II. The third is the short funerary inscription at Suci in Outer Mongolia, probably datable to the first quarter of IX, and cited as Suci followed by the line.

(3) VIII ff., that is, in this case, texts the earliest of which may go back as far as VIII, although the actual manuscripts are probably later, while the latest, apart from the XVIII manuscript of the Suvarṇaprabhāsa Sūtra, the composition of which was much earlier, is probably a Civil document dated firmly to the second lines 1 to 324, the second lines 1763 to 2160, the rest being unpublished); and the Turkish translation of the Suvarṇaprabhāsaśūtra, published by V. V. Radlov and S. Ye. Malov, St. Petersburg, 1913 ff., cited as Suv. followed by the page and line.

(d) Civil (Civ.) texts, that is not religious. These fall into four classes:

(i) Medical texts, probably mere translations of texts in other languages. The main collection is in G. R. Rachmati, Zur Heilkunde der Uiguren I (SPAW, 1930) cited as H I followed by the line, and II (SPAW, 1932) cited as H II followed by the page and line. There are also one or two such texts in TT VII and VIII.

(ii) Astronomical, astrological, magic, and omen texts, published in TT I (SPAW, 1929), cited by the line, TT VII and VIII and USp. Texts of the first two kinds are mainly translated from the Chinese, generally with an Indian background, and are mostly late in the period; the line between unorthodox Buddhist and purely magical texts is indefinite and I may have put some texts the wrong side of it.

(iii) Commercial and legal documents and (iv) miscellaneous texts. The main collection of these is in USp.; there is one in TT VII, No. 42, a very late text apparently transcribed from an original in the Arabic alphabet, and there are one or two published elsewhere. When quoting the last I have indicated where they may be found.

A good many of the Uyğ. texts listed above have been completely or partially indexed; but no index is available for others, including Suv. which is much the longest, and I cannot guarantee that I have listed every word which occurs in these unindexed texts.

C. Old Kırğız (O. Kır.)

22. It is commonly believed that those of the Yeniseian inscriptions which were found not in Khakassia but in Tuva were set up by Kırğız chieftains in that area and are in the Old Kırğız language. It has been suggested that they are the oldest monuments in the Runic alphabet and may date back as far as VI, but L. R. Kyzlasov has recently proved by archaeological methods (see Studies, p. 70) that most of them date from IX and X and that some may be even later. I have classified them as IX ff. The most convenient edition is that of Malov mentioned in para. 20 (2) (b), but A. M. Shcherbak has published revised texts of some of them, and some photographs and squeezes are available. I have therefore not always followed Malov's readings.

D. Xākāni (Xak.)

23. Xak. is a language closely related both to Türkü and to Uyğ., but sufficiently distinct from both to be regarded as a separate language. It was certainly not directly descended from the latter, indeed it existed side by side with Uyğ. for two or three centuries, and was perhaps not quite directly descended from the former. It is first identified in XI, and there are two Xak. XI texts of major quarter of xiv. The actual date of composition of the remainder is quite uncertain; some of the legal and commercial documents are certainly not older than xiii and contain Mongolian, Arabic, and Persian loan-words, but I have taken them into account with suitable precautions, since it is quite impossible to divide these documents neatly into two categories, those anterior and those subsequent to A.D. 1200. These texts can be divided into the following classes:

(a) Christian texts (Chr.). These are likely to be quite early in the period. Only two seem to have survived, the well-known apocryphon about the Magi published in F. W. K. Müller, Uigurica (AKPAW, 1908) pp. 5 ff., cited as U I followed by the page and line, and a fragment published in M III cited by page and line.

(b) Manichæan (Man.) texts in Uyğ. and Uyğ.-A published in the various works listed in para. 20 (2) (e) above. All are fragmentary and vary greatly in length, though none are very long; in the case of the longer texts it is usually possible to determine whether they are in Man. Türkü, Uyğ. or Uyğ.-A; when this is impossible they are cited as Uyğ. The earliest of these texts probably go back to viii and the latest are unlikely to be much later than ix.

(c) Buddhist (Bud.) texts. These have been published in substantial quantities; the following is a list of those which I have quoted. There are four volumes of Uigurica, the first three edited by F. W. K. Müller, the last by A. von Gabain. U I has already been mentioned under (a); U II (AKPAW, 1911), U III (APAW, 1922), and U IV (APAW, 1931) are cited by page and line. The following volumes of the TT series mentioned in para. 20 (2) (e) contain Buddhist texts: TT IV (SPAW, 1930); TT V (SPAW, 1931); TT VI (SPAW, 1934); TT VII (APAW, 1937); TT VIII (ADAW, 1954, the volume containing the texts in the Brāhmī alphabet), and TT X (ADAW, 1959). Of these VI and X are cited by the line, IV and V by page and line, and VII and VIII by document and line. There is a useful and complete Analytischer Index zu den fünf ersten Stücken der TT (SPAW, 1931) and VI contains a partial and VII, VIII, and X a complete index of words. Another AKPAW volume containing Buddhist texts is F. W. K. Müller, Zwei Pfahlschriften aus dem Turfanfunden, 1915, cited as Pfahl. followed by the page and line. W. Radloff, Uigurische Sprachdenkmäler, Leningrad, 1928, cited as USp. followed by document number and line, contains inter alia a number of Buddhist texts. Other publications which I have quoted are the following: Paul Pelliot, La Version ouigoure de l'histoire des princes Kalyāṅkara et Pāpāṅkara, T'oung Pao XV. 2, 1914, cited as PP followed by the page and line; W. Bang and G. R. Rachmati, Türlü Cehennemler üzerine Uygurca Parçalar, Türkiyat Mecmuası IV, Istanbul, 1934, cited as TM IV followed by the line; Şinasi Tekin, Kuanşi İm Pusar, Erzurum, 1960 (superseding Radloff's partial edition, St. Petersburg, 1911) cited as Kuan. followed by the line; W. Radloff, Ṭiṣṭavustik, ein in türkischer Sprache bearbeitetes buddhistisches Sutra, St. Petersburg, 1910, cited as Ṭiṣ., followed by the manuscript page and line; A. von Gabain, Die uigurische Übersetzung der Biographie Hüen-tsangs (SPAW, 1935) and Briefe der uigurischen Hüen-tsang-Biographie (SPAW, 1938), both cited as Hüen-ts. followed by the line (the first containing importance. The first is the earliest, and by far the most important, Turkish-Arabic dictionary, the Divân Luğati'l-Türk of Maḥmūd al-Kāşğari, dating from the third quarter of XI and cited as Kaş. The quotations in the form Kaş followed by a roman number and an arabic number and sometimes a second arabic number are from the Turkish translation by B. Atalay, Divanü Lügat-it-türk Tercümesi, 3 volumes and index, Ankara, 1940-3, since this edition is reasonably accessible, and the index is excellent and comprehensive. The principle which I have followed is to cite the volume and page for main entries and the line as well for quotations from other parts of the book. I have, I hope, included every word which it contains. Atalay's translation is not wholly satisfactory and I have in every case consulted the facsimile (the printed text contains many minor inaccuracies) and normally quote the original Arabic in my citations, so that the accuracy of the translation can be checked. In a number of cases I have altered Atalay's readings and spellings. The second major text is the Kutadğū: Bilig of Yūsuf Xaṣṣ Hācib of Balasagun, the earliest surviving purely literary text in any Turkish language, also dating from the third quarter of XI. My quotations are taken from R. R. Arat's critical edition, Istanbul, 1947, cited as KB followed by the line in that edition. In cases of doubt I have also consulted the facsimiles of the three manuscripts; in some cases my spellings are slightly different from Arat's. As his index has not yet been published, I cannot guarantee that I have listed every word which occurs in this text, but I have searched it fairly thoroughly. I have classified all the words from these two sources as XI since this date is certain. The Verse Preface of KB is not part of the original text and its language is obviously a little later; quotations from it have therefore been entered under the heading of XII (?) KBVP followed by the line. The Prose Preface is later still and perhaps not really Xak. but a few quotations from it have been entered as XIII (?) KBPP followed by the line.

E. Oğuz

24. Kāşğari lists a certain number of words in a language which he calls 'the language of al-Guzziya' and says that owing to long contact between the people who spoke it and Persian-speakers it had acquired a number of Persian loan-words, often in a rather corrupt form (see ören and turma:). It was no doubt the language spoken by the Oğuz tribes, who were then living in the neighbourhood of the Aral Sea and had to some extent lost contact with the other Turkish tribes. They were descendants of the Oğuz (Tokkuz Oğuz etc.) who had played quite an important part in history during VII and VIII and probably even earlier. There is no reason to suppose that during that period they spoke a language markedly different from that of the Türkü; but although even by XI the Oğuz language had undergone some phonetic decay and accepted a number of loan-words, it retained, and its modern descendants still retain, some characteristics more primitive even than those of Türkü, e.g. initial d- in certain words (see para. 14 (1)). Only a few specifically Oğuz words are listed in Kaş. but they are the earliest surviving specimens of the language.

F. Kıpçak (Kıp.)

25. Kāṣṣārī also cites a number of words in a language which he calls 'the language of Qifcāq', a language which he describes as similar to Oğuz. Several words are mentioned as being common to Kıp. and Oğuz but not known in Xak. In XI the Kıpçak were west of the Oğuz in southern Russia and Kaṣ. is the earliest authority for their language.

G. Minor eleventh-century dialects

26. Kāṣṣārī describes a few words as belonging to other contemporary dialects with which he was acquainted; those mentioned most often are the dialects of Arğu., Çigil, and Gancak (the last probably not really Turkish, see Studies, p. 132 and the remarks on kendük below). I have included these words with Kāṣṣārī's descriptions of them.

II. MEDIEVAL TEXTS

27. The Uyğ. language lingered on for some centuries in Chinese Turkistan (Sinkiang); indeed the latest surviving Bud. Uyğ. manuscript, that of the Suvarṇaprabhāsa-sūtra already mentioned, was copied in XVIII, but the only accessible authority for Uyğ. in this latest state is the Chinese-Uyğ. dictionary (Chin.-Uyğ. Dict.) prepared by a committee of Chinese scholars towards the end of XIV. Some words from this work are included in Radloff's Wörterbuch and a complete list from another edition was recently published by Prof. L. Ligeti in Un Vocabulaire sino-ouïgoure des Ming, le Kao-tch'ang-kouan Yi-chou du Bureau des Traducteurs, Dissertationes Sodalium Instituti Asiae Interioris II, Budapest, 1966. I have included references to this work as Ligeti, followed by the page.

28. The difficulty about classifying most of the remaining medieval texts, which were, with only one or two exceptions, written by or for Moslem Turks, is that in XI the only literary language in which texts have survived, and probably the only literary language then in use, was Xak., but that towards the end of that century or very soon afterwards literary languages emerged which were written in different areas where the spoken languages were rather different from one another, and so very soon began to pursue different courses. There are interesting discussions of the problem of classifying the texts concerned in Philologiae Turcicae Fundamenta I, Wiesbaden, 1959 (cited as Fundamenta) and more particularly in J. Eckmann's article 'Das Chwarezmtürkische' in that volume, and also in the introduction to A. K. Borovkov, Leksika sredneaziatskogo Tefsira XIII—XV vv., Moscow, 1963 (cited as Tef.).

29. What can perhaps be called the direct line of descent, or southern stream, evolved in the area called in the early medieval period Khorasan and the southern part of Mā warā'u'l-nahr (Transoxiana). By XV the literary language used in that area was what is commonly, if inaccurately, called Çağatay (Çağ.), but at any rate three, and probably four, texts have survived which were written between XI and XV (both excluded) in languages intermediate between Xak. and Çağ. The spoken language in this area during this period seems to have been fairly homogeneous with the literary language, except that there was probably a greater concentration of Arabic and Persian, and perhaps from XIII onwards also Mongolian, loan-words in the literary than in the spoken language.

30. Possibly the earliest of these intermediate texts which, since it contains some Mongolian words, cannot be earlier than XIII, is the didactic poem edited by R. R. Arat under the title Atebetü'l-hakayık, Istanbul, 1951, cited as At. followed by the lines.

31. An even earlier date has been suggested for a few Turkish tafsirs, that is interlinear translations of the Koran (mostly bilingual, some trilingual with a Persian translation of the Arabic and a Turkish translation of the Persian) with commentaries and other additional matter. The difficulty in determining the date of these texts and the exact language in which they were composed lies in the fact that the surviving manuscripts of them were all written later, perhaps a good deal later, than the date at which they were composed and have been subjected to a good deal of modernizing by the copyists, later phonetic forms, and even actual words, being substituted for the author's own phonetic forms and words. It is not at all clear whether all, or at any rate all the earlier, bilingual manuscripts go back to a single archetype or whether some are independent translations and compilations, but the latter is the more probable. Borovkov in Tef. has indexed the Turkish vocabulary of one such work, the manuscript of which was found in the town of Karshi. The name of the author, the date of composition, the name of the copyist, and the date of copying are all equally unknown, but the manuscript seems to be later than that of a similar tafsir found in Turkey dated A.D. 1333 (see Tef., p. 4) which is said to have a text close to that of the Karshi manuscript. An examination of the vocabulary shows that it is very heterogeneous. It includes a number of words of great antiquity for some of which, e.g. 2 ap, it is the latest authority. On the other hand, it also includes Arabic, Persian, and even some Mongolian, loan-words, which proves that in its present form it cannot be earlier than XIII, and it even contains different forms of the same word, e.g. adrıl-, ayrıl-, ayrul-, which belong to different periods in the history of the language. It has been suggested that these are evidence that the language used, even if basically Xak., has been heavily influenced by Oğuz and Kıp. and that it must therefore have been composed in some northern area and ought to be classified as Xwarazmian (see para. 37). There is not, however, any conclusive evidence that this is so, and there are other possible explanations of the non-Xak. elements in the text. In the circumstances it seems better to regard the language as intermediate between Xak. and Çağ., to date Tef. as XIII(?) and cite it immediately after At.

32. Next in time, and in much the same language, comes the Qişasu'l-anbiyā of Nāşiru'l-dīn al-Rabğūzi composed in A.D. 1310. In this case, too, all the surviving manuscripts are later than the work itself and have been subjected to a good deal of modernization. No index of the vocabulary has been compiled, but a number of words from a XIX printed edition are cited in Radloff's Wörterbuch and some of these citations have been included here as XIV Rbğ., followed by a reference to Radloff.

33. One Arabic-Turkish vocabulary, the Hilyatu'l-insān wa halbatu'l-lisān of Camālu'l-din ibnu'l-Muhannā (see Studies, p. 193) is probably of about the same date as Rbğ. It contains an extensive list of Arabic words with the Turkish equivalents. The author in his preface says that they are in two languages 'those of our country and of Turkistan', and enumerates the phonetic differences between the two. The facts given suggest that the first is an early form of Azerbaijani and the second a late form of Xak., but, except in a minimum number of cases, it is impossible to decide whether any given word belongs to one of these languages or both. Very probably the great bulk of them are early Azerbaijani, but as a matter of convenience it is easier to cite this work as XIV Muh. immediately after Rbğ. followed by the page and line of Melioranski's edition (Mel.) and the page of Kilisli Rif'at's edition (Rif.); the two editions are not identical and it is likely that the latter, which is based on a single manuscript, contains a good many words added to the author's text by later copyists.

34. Finally there are many texts in Çağatay, the earliest perhaps late XIV, the great bulk XV or even a little later. The language still survives in a later form as modern Uzbek, and no attempt has ever been made to define the latest date at which Çağ. proper was still in use. Apart from a very extensive literature, three major Çağ.-Persian and Çağ.-Old Osmanli dictionaries have been published which, although they all profess to be primarily dictionaries of the language used by Mīr 'Alī Şīr Nawā'ī, probably give a fairly exhaustive list of the Çağ. vocabulary, excluding the Arabic and Persian, but not the Mongolian, words which it includes. These are, in order of age:

(1) Badā'i'u'l-luğat written in Herat by Tālī'-i Harawī during the reign of the Timurid Sultān Ḥusayn (A.D. 1438-1506), a Çağ.-Persian dictionary of which the only(?) surviving manuscript, dated A.H. 1117 (A.D. 1705-6) was published in facsimile with a comprehensive index by A. K. Borovkov, Moscow, 1961.

(2) The anonymous Çağ.-Old Osmanli dictionary commonly known (after the first entry in it) as the Abuşka, compiled during the first half of XVI and published by V. de Véliaminof-Zernof as Dictionnaire djagatai-turc, St. Petersburg, 1869.

(3) The Sanglax, a Çağ.-Persian dictionary written by Muḥammad Mahdī Xān and finished in A.H. 1172 or 1173 (roughly A.D. 1759). A facsimile of one of the best manuscripts was published with an introduction and comprehensive indices by myself as E. J. W. Gibb Memorial, New Series XX, London, 1960.

Of these the Sanglax, although the latest, is much the most extensive and best, the author correcting a good many mistakes made in previous dictionaries, including the two mentioned above and others which have not survived. I have cited the first occasionally as Bad. followed by the page, the second more frequently as Vel. followed by the page and the last, almost comprehensively, as San. followed by the page and line of the facsimile.

35. Exaggerated importance has been attached by some scholars to Şayx Sulayman Buxarī, Luğat-i Çağatay wa Turki 'Otmāni, Istanbul, A.H. 1298 (A.D. 1881); it contains very little original matter, apart from the mistakes which abound in it (see San., p. 31) but I have occasionally cited it as ŞS. followed by the page.

36. There is in Bokhara an important manuscript of the Muqaddimatu'l-Adab of Maḥmūdu'l-Zamaṣṣarī, a classified Arabic glossary compiled early in XII with an interlinear translation in Turkish (as well as in Persian and Mongolian). The manuscript is dated A.D. 1495 and there is no prima facie reason for supposing that the Turkish translation is much older. The language is therefore likely to be Çağ. and this is confirmed by an examination of the Turkish equivalents in N. Poppe's index to the Mongolian translation in Mongol'skii slovar' Mukaddimat al-Adab, Moscow, 1938. Prof. Borovkov, when he died in 1963, had almost completed an index of the Turkish words in this manuscript, but it is uncertain whether it will now be completed and published. The Turkish entries in Prof. Poppe's work are not in a convenient form for use in preparing a Turkish dictionary, and are not, according to Prof. Borovkov, wholly accurate. I have not, therefore, quoted this work except occasionally (as Zam.).

37. The history of the northern stream of literary languages is a great deal more complicated. There was undoubtedly in XII a second literary focus further north than the area described in para. 28, centred perhaps in the court of the Xwārazmšāhs who first became important early in XII. The most convenient name for texts belonging to this stream is that recently adopted in such works as the Fundamenta, Xwarazmian (Xwar.), although the literary language which evolved there must also have been in use over a much wider area extending into southern Russia. The spoken languages in this area at this period were markedly different from Xak.; the Turks in Xwarazm and the Aral Sea area were Oğuz and those in southern Russia Kıpçak and already in XI Kāşğarī regarded Oğuz and Kıp. as separate languages fairly close to one another but different from Xak. Thus; so far as literary works are concerned, it is safe to assume that Xak. was very quickly modified to bring it closer to the local languages.

38. The oldest text from this area, if its colophon is to be relied on, was in fact composed not in Xwārazm but in the Crimea. It is the Qissa-i Yūsuf written by a certain 'Alī, of whom nothing further is known, in A.H. 630 (A.D. 1233). As usual the manuscripts are a good deal later and have been more or less modernized. D. Brockelmann listed a number of words from this work in 'Alī's Qissa-i Yūsuf, der älteste Vorläufer der osmanischen Literatur (AKPAW, 1917). It has long been recognized that the language is not Osmanli and I have cited the words quoted in this paper as Xwar. XIII ‘Ali followed by the page, but it may well contain more Oğuz elements than most other Xwar. texts.

39. Another text which can be tentatively identified as coming from the Aral Sea area is the enigmatic text sometimes called Oğuz Nāme (see Studies, pp. 48, etc.) written in the Mongolian Official Alphabet and edited by W. Bang and G. R. Rachmati, Die Legende von Oghuz Qaghan (SPAW, 1932). It contains several Mongolian loan-words and so cannot be earlier than XIII, but can hardly be much later. Considering its subject-matter, the language is likely to be much more specifically Oğuz than most other contemporary texts, but the ambiguity of the alphabet used makes it impossible to determine whether it has such a specifically Oğuz trait as initial d-. It is cited as XIII(?) Oğ., followed by the line in the edition mentioned.

40. Next in order of time come five texts which are all more or less solidly dated. The oldest is the Mu‘īnu’l-murīd written in Xwārazm in A.D. 1313 (see Eckmann, op. cit., p. 115), but I have not been in a position to cite any words from it.

41. The next is the Xusrāw u Širīn, written by a certain Quṭb at the court of Tini Beg Xan of the Golden Horde in A.D. 1341–2. It has been admirably edited by A. Zajączkowski, Najstarsza wersja turecka xusrāv u Širīn, 3 vols., Warsaw, 1958–61, with a facsimile of the only manuscript, a transcription, and a full index excluding the Arabic and Persian loan-words. It is cited as XIV Quṭb followed by the page in Zajączkowski's index.

42. The third is the Muḥabbat Nāma of Xwarazmi. Two manuscripts of this poem have survived, the second containing a number of verses which did not form part of the original text; see my paper on this poem in CAJ VII. 4, 1962. Unfortunately verses 437 and 440 which state that the poem was composed 'on the banks of the Sir Darya in A.H. 754 (A.D. 1353)', are among the interpolated verses but the date must be approximately correct, since it falls within the reign of Cani Beg Xan of the Golden Horde, during whose reign the poem was composed. It is cited from the recent editions (see Studies, p. 48) as XIV MN followed by the number of the verse.

43. Next there is the Nahcu’l-Farādīs written by Maḥmūd ibn ‘Ali in Xwārazm, or perhaps Saray on the Volga, sometime before A.D. 1358, the date of the earliest manuscript, but not necessarily much before, since there is fairly good evidence that the author did not die until A.D. 1360. A reproduction of one of the best manuscripts was published in J. Eckmann, Nehcü’l-Feradis I, Ankara, 1956, but unfortunately his index is not yet published.

44. Finally there is the free translation into Turkish of Sa’di’s Gulistān. Only one manuscript of this work has survived, and a facsimile of it, with a preface by Prof. F. N. Uzluk, was published by the Türk Dil Kurumu in 1954 under the title Seyfi Serâyî Gulistan Tercümesi. The translator was a native of Sarai on the Volga, but made his translation at the Mamluk court in Egypt in A.D. 1391.

45. Quite recently there has appeared the first half of an admirable dictionary by E. Fazylov of Qutb, MN, the Nahcu'l-Farâdis, and the Gulistan, with extensive quotations and references, under the title Starouzbekskii yazik. Khorezmiiskie pamyatniki XIV veka, Tashkent, 1966. I have used this work extensively to provide references to the Nahcu'l-Farâdis, under the title Nahc. followed by the page and line in Eckmann's facsimile for those words contained in this part of the dictionary; for the rest of the vocabulary I have had to rely on a very inadequate list of words published by Kivâmettin in TM IV. I have not thought it necessary to add references to the Gulistan (Gul.) except very occasionally, since its vocabulary is practically identical with that of the other works mentioned.

46. Apart from the texts mentioned above a few other Xwar. texts have survived and one or two short ones have been published, at any rate in facsimile, but are not cited herein.

47. Seven vocabularies of medieval Kıp. have been published, some of them containing some Türkmen (T'km.) words. The most important, and the only one which is purely Kıp., is the Codex Cumanicus, a handbook of the Koman (Kom.) language, a Kıp. dialect, in Latin, compiled early in XIV (see Studies, p. 48 and Fundamenta). The text is not entirely homogeneous; the earlier part was compiled for Italian merchants, but it also contains later additions by German missionaries. An index to it was published in K. Grønbech, Komanisches Wörterbuch, Copenhagen, 1942, and is cited as XIV Kom. CCI (for the Italian) and CCG (for the German part); Gr. sometimes followed by the page.

48. The remaining six are all in Arabic, one a list of Turkish words in alphabetical order with Arabic equivalents, the others Arabic handbooks with Turkish equivalents. All these vocabularies have a specified or inferable Egyptian Mamluk background, and it seems clear that basically they are handbooks of the languages spoken by Turkish slaves brought to Egypt from southern Russia, some of them spoke Kıp. and others Tkm., an Oğuz dialect. For example, Hou. (see para. 49) seems from internal evidence to have been compiled from oral information collected in the Mamluk possessions in Syria. In some cases an Arabic word is translated by different Kıp. and Tkm. words, in others individual words are described as Kıp. or Tkm., but in the great majority of cases no such indication is given. The presumption in nearly all cases is that the word is Kıp., but there are one or two passages in Id. (see para. 50) which seem to imply the contrary.

49. Until almost today it was generally accepted that the oldest of these vocabularies was the anonymous Arabic-Turkish vocabulary in Leiden manuscript

517. Warner, published in M. T. Houtsma, Ein türkisch-arabisches Glossar, Leiden, 1894, cited herein as XIII Hou. followed by the page and line of the Arabic text. But as this book was actually going to press an article by Barbara Flemming (Hamburg) was published in Der Islam, Band 44, Berlin, June 1968, pp. 226 ff., in which she announced that Houtsma, who purported to publish the exact text of this unique manuscript had converted the date in the colophon into the figures 643, whereas the facsimile published in her article shows quite clearly the words talāta wa arba'in wa sab'umi'ya that is (Şa'bān) A.H. 743 equivalent to (January) A.D. 1343. Instead, therefore, of dating back to XIII and being the oldest of these vocabularies, it goes back only to the middle of XIV and comes chronologically between the two vocabularies mentioned in the following paragraphs. This announcement unfortunately appeared too late for it to be possible to correct the numerous references to Hou. in the dictionary.

50. There are two other XIV vocabularies. The Kitābu'l-idrāk li-lisāni'l-atrāk, the only list of Turkish words with Arabic equivalents, was written in Egypt, probably in A.D. 1313, by Aṭīru'l-dīn Abū Ḥayyān Muḥammad ibn Yūsuf, originally a native of Granada. A critical edition was published by A. Caferoğlu, Abu Hayyān, Kitāb al-Idrāk li-lisān al-Atrāk, Istanbul, 1931. It is cited as XIV İd. followed by the page in the Arabic text.

51. The Kitāb Bulğati'l-muštāq fi luğati'l-turk wa'l-qifşāq was written by Camālu'l-dīn Abū Muḥammad 'Abdullah al-Turki probably in the middle of XIV and perhaps also in the Mamluk dominions in Syria. The only manuscript, which is not quite complete, was published with a comprehensive index by A. Zajączkowski, Manuel arabe de la langue des Turks et des Kiptchaks, Warsaw, I, 1938; II (title in Polish), 1954. It is cited as XIV Bul. followed by the page and line of the printed text in I and the page of the manuscript in II (verbs).

52. There are two XV vocabularies, both surviving in unique manuscripts and dating from early in the century, but it is uncertain which is the older. Al-tuhfatu'l-zakiya fi luğati'l-turkiya, an Arabic-Turkish vocabulary in alphabetical order, mainly Kıp. with a number of Tkm. words, was written almost certainly in Egypt and before A.D. 1426 (the date of a note on the first page). It was edited with a facsimile, translation, and index in B. Atalay, Ettuhfet-üz-zekiyye fil-luğat-it-türkiyye, Istanbul, 1945. It is cited as Tuh. followed by the page and line of the facsimile.

53. Al-qawāninu'l-kulliyya fi-dabṭi'l-luğati'l-turkiya was compiled by an unknown author in Cairo by cross-questioning Turks living there. The book is undated, but a reference in it to Tamerlane makes it certain that it was written in XV, and probably early in the century. The text was published by Köprülü zade Mehmed Fuad (Prof. F. Köprülü), Istanbul, 1928. It is cited as Kav. followed by the page and line.

54. Quite recently Prof. Zajączkowski published an account of a short Arabic-Kip. vocabulary entitled al-Durratü'l-muđi'a fi luđati'l-turkiya discovered in Florence, with an extract from the text and an index to the extract, in Rocznik Orientalistyczny XXIX, Pt. i, pp. 39 ff. The work is anonymous and undated but clearly belongs to the first half of xv. It adds little to our knowledge of Kip. but I have quoted a few words from it as xv Dur. followed by the page.

55. The Oğuz language which is conveniently, but not quite accurately, called 'Old Osmanli' (Osm.), since the earliest texts in it date from before the foundation of the Ottoman Empire, is recorded from mid XIII, but the XIII material is scanty. The earliest is a few verses in the works of Mawlānā Calālu'l-din al-Rūmi (A.D. 1207/8-1273/4) and a few verses in those of his son commonly called Sultan Veled. These verses might more properly be classified as Salcuk, but as they are the first stage of a continuous literary tradition it seems more convenient to classify these very early texts and other slightly later texts which are not strictly Osm., like the Kitāb Dede Korkut, which seems to be in a Tkm. language, probably xv., as Osm. so as to avoid an excessively complicated terminology. A good many early works of this kind have been published with partial or complete indices, but it did not seem to me necessary for the purposes of this dictionary to do more than cite under the heading XIV ff. Osm. (since the XIII material is so inconsiderable) those of the words contained in this dictionary which reappear in the Türk Dil Kurumu publication Tanıklariyle Tarama Sözlüğü, 4 vols., Istanbul, 1943-5; Ankara, 1953-7 (TTS I-IV) or as 'Rūmi' words in San. A new edition of TTS is now being published, but is not yet sufficiently far advanced to make citation from it very convenient.

THE MODERN LANGUAGES

56. It would not be possible to include in this book all the evidence which could be assembled regarding the survival in modern languages of the early words listed herein without a much greater delay in its publication and a much greater increase in its bulk than would be regarded as advantageous. In any event it is sufficiently obvious to all students of the Turkish languages that common words like at 'a horse' and al- 'to take' still survive almost everywhere to make a detailed proof of the point unnecessary. Nor is it very important, when a basic word is known to survive in some or all modern languages, to know whether its various derivatives survive also. On the other hand, for the reasons stated in para. 8, the subject cannot be entirely neglected, and it is important to include at any rate some references to modern languages. This immediately raises the question how modern languages should be classified and grouped. A good many systems of classification have already been suggested; there are two quite different ones in Fundamenta; but for present purposes it is hardly necessary to use anything more elaborate than a simple geographical system. Even this is open to some objections, since there are no clear-cut geographical lines between the modern descendants of the early languages, and some modern languages descended from different ancient languages have in the course of time developed characteristics which bring them closer to one another than to languages with which they are genetically related. After a good deal of reflection I finally decided upon a sixfold division: north-eastern (NE), south-eastern (SE), north-central (NC), south-central (SC), north-western (NW), and south-western (SW). Of these the NW languages are, genetically speaking, Kıp. and the SW Oğuz; the SC and probably SE are, broadly speaking, descended from Xak. but by different lines of descent.

57. In the NE group are included the languages spoken, but until recently not written, in eastern Siberia and adjacent areas. Yakut, however, which has been isolated from the rest so long that it has acquired very special characteristics of its own, is seldom cited, the authority used being E. K. Pekarsky, Slovar' yakutskogo yazyka, St. Petersburg, 1907-30, cited as Pek. The most important authority for the vocabulary of these languages is W. Radloff, Versuch eines Wörterbuches der türk-Dialecte (Opyt slovarya tyurkskikh narechii), 4 vols., St. Petersburg, 1888-1911, cited as R followed by the volume in roman, and the column in arabic numerals, individual languages being mentioned in the abbreviated forms used in that work with the minor alterations of spelling shown in the List of Abbreviations. I have also used the Khakassko-russkii slovar', edited by N. A. Baskakov, Moscow, 1953, cited as Khak. sometimes followed by the page, the Tuvinsko-russkii slovar', edited by A. A. Pal'mbakh, Moscow, 1955, cited as Tuv. sometimes followed by the page, and occasionally the modern Russian-Khakas, Russian-Tuvan, and Russian-Altay dictionaries.

58. In the SE group are included the Turkish languages and dialects of Chinese Turkestan and adjacent areas, which have traditionally been called Eastern Türki and are now called Neo-Uyğur by Soviet and Chinese scholars. These fall into two main groups, the literary language written in Arabic script and the spoken dialects. I have called both Türki. For the first, citations are from R. B. Shaw, A Sketch of the Turki Language, Calcutta, 1878, cited as Shaw followed by the page, and Burhan Şehidi, Uyğurça-Xenuşa-Ruşça Luğat (Uigursko-kitaisko-russkii slovar'), Peking, 1953, cited as BŞ followed by the page. A good many words in one dialect, Tarançı, spoken in southern Siberia are included in R., and are cited as Tar. followed by a reference to R. For the rest, mainly dialects spoken in southern Sinkiang, I have used G. Jarring, An Eastern Turki-English Dialect Dictionary, Lund, 1964, cited as Jarring followed by the page. One language in this area is in a class by itself, that of the Sarığ Yuğur in Kansu, the only language which can reasonably be regarded as directly descended from early Uyğ. It is recorded in S. Ye. Malov, Yazyk zheltykh uigurov, Alma Ata, 1957, cited occasionally as Sarığ Yuğ. followed by the page.

59. In the NC group are included Kırğız (Kır.) and Kazax (Kzx.), called in R. Kara Kırğız and Kırğız respectively. Historically Kır. belongs to the same family as the NE languages and Kzx. seems to be a Kıp. dialect, but the peoples talking them have lived in close propinquity to one another for so long that they now have many common characteristics. The authorities which I have used principally are, for Kir., K. K. Yudakhin's Kirgizsko-russkii slovar', Moscow, 1965, cited as Yud. followed by the page, and for Kzx. Kh. Makhmudov and G. Musaev, Kazakhsko-russkii slovar', Alma Ata, 1954, and B. N. Shnitnikov's Kazakh-English Dictionary, The Hague 1966, cited as MM and Shnit. respectively followed by the page. I have also occasionally used the equivalent Russian-Kir. and Russian-Kzx. dictionaries, and only occasionally quoted R since the modern authorities seem to be rather fuller and more reliable.

60. There are several modern SC spoken dialects, but the only literary language is Uzbek (Uzb.) for which I have used A. K. Borovkov, Uzbeksko-russkii slovar', Moscow, 1959, cited as Bor. followed by the page, and less often the Russian-Uzb. dictionary of 1954. The vocabulary in H. Vambéry's Čagataische Sprachstudien, Leipzig, 1867, is very heterogeneous in character. The bulk of the words in it are classical Çağ. taken, often with some errors, from various oriental authors; the remainder seem to be colloquial XIX Uzb. words collected by the author himself, and occasionally cited as Vam. followed by the page.

61. The NW group comprises a rather wide range of languages. Those quoted in R include Kazan Tatar (Kaz.) and three Karaim dialects, those of the Crimea, Lutsk, and Troki (Kar., Krm., L., and T.) but he also uses Krm. for the non-Karaim language spoken in the Crimea which is indistinguishable from Osm., so that the only safe indication that a word is Karaim is that it is given in the Hebrew alphabet. The words quoted from these languages are reproduced with the same abbreviations and the reference in R. For Kar. T. I have occasionally used T. Kowalski, Karaimische Texte im Dialekt von Troki, Cracow, 1929, cited as Kow. followed by the page. For (Kazan) Tatar I have used the Tatarisko-russkii slovar', Moscow, 1966, cited as Kaz. or Tat., and for Karakalpak (Kk.) and Nogay (Nog.) I have used the Karakalpaksko-russkii slovar', Moscow, 1958 and the Nogaisko-russkii slovar', Moscow, 1963, both edited by N. A. Baskakov and cited by the page, and occasionally the Russian-Kk. and -Nog. dictionaries. For Kumyk (Kum.) there is at present available only the Russko-kumyjskii slovar', Moscow, 1960, edited by Z. Z. Bamatov; Bashkir has diverged so far from the rest of the group that I have not taken it into account. No convenient authorities for minor languages like Karaçay and Balkar are at present available. As regards Chuvash (Çuv.) see para. 2.

62. In the SW group are included only three languages, Azerbayjani (Az.), Osm. (including Rep. Turkish), and Tkm. For Az. I have used various authorities published in the Soviet Union, not citing them individually. There are many authorities for Osm., but those which I have generally used are Sir James Redhouse, A Turkish and English Lexicon, in the Constantinople, 1921, reprint, cited as Red. followed by the page; Şayx Sami, Qâmûs-i Türkî, 2 vols., Istanbul, A.H. 1318 (A.D. 1900-1) cited as Sami followed by the page; and occasionally the

A.H. 1306 (A.D. 1888) edition of the Lehce-i Osmaniya, cited as Leh. followed by the page. In noting the survival of words in modern languages I have not included those words which have recently been re-introduced into Rep. Turkish to replace Arabic and Persian loan-words. Some of these are genuine old words which had become obsolete in Osm., others are old loan-words like acun (for a:ju:n, a word borrowed from Sogdian) and çağ 'period' (a medieval loan-word from Mong.), but they have not had a continuous history in Osm.

63. As pointed out in paras. 2 and 12 it is often important in tracing the history of a Turkish word to know whether it became a loan-word in Mongolian and, if so, when, since this often throws light not only on the age of a word but also on its original pronunciation and meaning. The question of such loan-words is discussed at length in Studies, Chap. 11, and it is there suggested that these words were borrowed in three main periods, the first, probably v and vi, during which words were borrowed by a Mongolian-speaking people, possibly the Kitañ, from an Iŕ Turkish-speaking tribe, possibly the Tavğaç; the second, probably between viii and xii; and the third during and after the reign of Chinggis. The earliest substantial remains of Mongolian are not, however, earlier than xiii. In citing Mongolian words borrowed from Turkish I have normally used three authorities:

(1) E. Haensch, Wörterbuch zu Manğol un Ni'uca Tobca'an, Leipzig, 1939, which contains a list of the words in the well-known Mong. XIII Secret History (SH), cited as Haensch followed by the page.

(2) The standard, though now somewhat antiquated, dictionary of Classical Mongolian, J. E. Kowalewski, Dictionnaire mongol-russe-français, Kazan, 1841 ff., cited as Kow. followed by the page.

(3) A good dictionary of modern written Mongolian, The Mongol-English Practical Dictionary, compiled by M. Haltod and others and published by the Evangelical Alliance Mission (in the U.S.A.) 1949-53, cited as Haltod followed by the page.

OTHER MODERN AUTHORITIES

64. In addition to the modern authorities quoted above use has been made of the following other modern authorities:

(1) A. Caferoğlu, Uygur Sözlüğü, 3 parts, Istanbul, 1934-8, a useful list of the words contained in the indices to the texts enumerated in paras. 20 (2) (e) and 21 above and one or two others, cited as Caf.

(2) v. G., ATG, see para. 20 (2) (e).

(3) G. Doerfer, Türkische und mongolische Elemente im Neupersischen; I Mongolische Elemente, Wiesbaden, 1963; II Türkische Elemente, alif bis tā, 1965; III ditto jīm bis kāf 1967, cited as Doerfer, followed by the volume and the number of the word.

(4) C. Brockelmann, Osttürkische Grammatik der islamischen Litteratur-sprachen Mittelasiens, Leiden, 1954, cited as Brockelmann followed by the number of the paragraph.

(5) A. M. Shcherbak, 'Nazvaniya domashnikh i dikikh zhivotnykh v tyurkskikh yazykakh' ('The names of domesticated and wild animals in the Turkish languages'), one of several articles in Istoricheskoe razvitie leksiki tyurkskikh yazykov, Moscow, 1961, cited as Shcherbak, followed by the page.

(6) The reproductions of MS. No. S. J. Kr. 4 638, Packet 8 in the manuscript collection of the Leningrad branch of the Institute of the Peoples of Asia, recently published in D. I. Tikhonov, Khozyaistvo i obshchestvennyi stroi uigurskogo gosudarstva X—XIV vv., Leningrad, 1966, and again with transcription and translation by E. R. Tenishev in an article called 'Khozyaistvennye zapisi na drevneuigurskom yazyke' in Issledovaniya po grammatike i leksike tyurkskikh yazykov, Tashkent, 1966. The manuscript is a late Uyğ. family archive, and is cited as Fam. Arch. followed by the line.

THE ARRANGEMENT OF INDIVIDUAL ENTRIES

65. In paragraphs 4, 5, and 8 some account has been given of the kind of information which is supplied about individual words. There is not a single word regarding which the full range of information is available, and it may therefore be useful to set out here what the full range is and how the various items are arranged. The word may be preceded by a code letter (see paragraph 18). If it is a hapax legomenon (see paragraph 7) it is immediately followed by 'Hap. leg.'. From this point the order varies slightly. It is sometimes convenient to enter next the original meaning possibly with some remarks on later developments, but this is superfluous if the word is Hap. leg., since the quotation will supply it, and if the word is derived it is more logical to record the derivation before the meaning. After this it may be desirable to add some other remarks. If the fact that the word is a loan-word in Mongolian is relevant, this is mentioned next. Information regarding the survival of the word then follows. It cannot be given earlier since there are many instances of words surviving in modern languages, usually NE, not because they have existed continuously in those languages but because they have been reborrowed from Mongolian, perhaps quite recently. Finally, cross-references may be given to other words etymologically related or other words with the same or a similar meaning. The quotations then follow in the following order: Türkü VIII; VIII ff.; VIII ff. Man.; VIII ff. Yen.: Uyğ. VIII; IX; VIII ff. Chr.; Man.-A; Man.; Bud.; Civ.; XIV Chin.-Uyğ. Dict.: O. Kir. IX ff.: Xak. XI (including KB); XII(?) KBVP; XIII(?) KBPP; At.; Tef.; XIV Rbg., Muh.: Arğu, Çigil, Gancak XI: Çağ. XV ff.: Oğuz XI: Xwar. XIII 'Ali; XIII(?) Oğ.; XIV Qutb, MN, Nahc.: Kıp. XI: Kom. XIV CCI, CCG; Gr.: Kıp./Tkm. XIII Hou.; XIV Id., Bul.; XV Tuh., Kav., Dur.: Osm. XIV ff.

66. In conclusion may I very humbly submit that this book contains a vast number of quotations, translations, and references, and that it is hard to believe that in such a large flock there are no black sheep? May I plead, as the father of Turkish lexicography did nine centuries ago, that yazma:s atım yağmur yağılma:s bilge: yanku: 'the only shot that never misses is the rain, the only scholar who never makes a mistake is the echo' Kaş. III 379, 20, and present in advance my apologies for these and other shortcomings.

It would not be proper for me to end this preface without expressing my sincere gratitude to the British Academy for their generous contribution towards the cost of producing this volume.

SUFFIXES

THE importance of Suffixes in the formation of the Turkish vocabulary needs no explanation, and nearly every Turkish grammar contains lists of the Suffs. (excluding declensional and conjugational Suffs.) used to form derived words. There are, for example, extensive lists in v. G., ATG, paras. 44 to 167 and Brockelmann, paras. 20 to 121 and 148 to 176. I included such a list in Studies, pp. 143 ff. and made some corrections and additions to it in Three Notes on Early Turkish, Türk Dili Araştırmaları Yıllığı, 1966, pp. 1 ff. The following is a more complete list of the Suffs. identified in this dictionary. It is divided into five parts, each arranged in a reversed alphabetical order from the last letter backwards. The first two parts contain the Suffs. attached to Nouns (including under this heading all words which are not Verbs) and Verbs respectively to form derived Nouns, and the next two parts the Suffs. attached to Nouns and Verbs respectively to form derived Verbs. The fifth is a list of Noun endings, which are not technically Suffs., since if they are removed what is left is not a recognizable Turkish word, but are found at the end of a sufficient number of Nouns with similar meanings to suggest that they form a class of some sort. Two of these endings are known Iranian Suffs., and the words to which they are attached must be Iranian loan-words. Some other endings are not recognizably, or even probably, foreign and seem to go back to a period far beyond our ken, when the Turkish vocabulary was being built up by methods which have long since been forgotten. Between these two classes are some endings which might be, but are not necessarily, foreign. It is noticeable that there is a high proportion of names of animals, insects, and plants in words with these endings.

It should be noted that, although there is commonly supposed to be a clear distinction between Denominal and Deverbal Suffs., the division is not at all clear cut; several Suffs. which might be regarded as properly Den., like -çı:, -duruk, also occasionally occur as Dev. Suffs., and the Dev. Suff. -ma:k occasionally as a Den. Suff.

Scattered through Kaş. are several remarks on the functions of some of these Suffs.; the relevant references are given in the lists below.

The concept of Active, Passive, Transitive, and Intransitive Verbs is a familiar one in all grammars; in Turkish the same terms must necessarily also be applied to N.s and N./A.s, since, for example, Dev. N.A.s like sınu:k (sın- -uk) 'broken', köçürme: (köçür- -me:) 'travelling (stove)', and êşidüt (êşid- -üt) 'hearing' can be translated only by Participles.

The word 'dominant' applied to a Suff. beginning with a vowel means that this vowel is an integral part of the Suff. and if the word to which it is attached ends in a vowel it is the latter that is elided, e.g. tarmut (tarm(a:-) -ut).

When a Suff. consisting of, or beginning with, a vowel is attached to a Dis. or Dis.V. ending in a consonant the second vowel of the V. is usually, but not always, elided, e.g. adri: (ad(i)r-i:), but biriki: (birik-i:).

It should be noted that when a Suff. beginning with -ğ/-g- is attached to a word ending with -n the two sounds are combined as -ŋ-, e.g. yaŋak (yan-ğak) and that when such a Suff. is attached to a word ending in -ğ/-g or -k in both cases the two sounds are combined as -kk-, which became in practice -k-, e.g. baku: (bak-ğu:), tiken (tik-gen), yaku: (yağ-ğu:).

I. NOMINAL SUFFIXES

(a) DENOMINAL (Den. N.)

- ça: about half a dozen words carry this Suff., which is more in the nature of an Equative Case-ending than a Suff. Most are Advs., like aŋça:, but at least one, barça: is used as a N./A. The Dim. Suff. -ça:/-çe:, which did not appear till the medieval period, was borrowed from Pe.
- ke: Dim. Suff., only(?) in siŋirke:, yipke:, perhaps a crasis of -kiñe:.
- la:-le: very rare; forms Advs. in ayla:, tünle:, and perhaps birle:, and Adjs. in körkle:/körtle: if these are not l.-w.s.
- kiña:/kiñe: Dim. Suff.; very rare.
- ra:/-re: forms Loc. Advs., e.g. ıçre: 'inside, within'; very rare.
- ya:/ye: only in bérye:, yırya:, prob. Sec. f. of -ra:/-re:.
- çı:/-çi: forms N.Ag.s; see Kaş. II 48; very common.
- nçı:/-nçi: See -nç.
- tı:/-ti: forms Advs. from Adjs., e.g. eđgü:ti:; very rare; ? also a Dev. Suff.
- nti: forms an Ordinal, only in ékkinti: 'second'; perhaps an earlier form of -nç.
- tı:/-türti:, etc. forms Loc. Advs., e.g. ıçtırti: which is practically syn. w. ıçre:; very rare.
- kı:/-ki: forms N./A.s describing position in time or space, e.g. aşnu:ki: 'former'; üze:ki: 'situated on or above'; fairly common in the early period; later the practice grew up of attaching this Suff. only to words in the Loc., e.g. evdeki: 'in the house'.
- du: dubious; only(?) in kardu: which might be a Dev. N.
- ğu:/-gü very rare as a Den. Suff.; forms A.N.s like eñçgü:, Conc. N.s like tuzğü:, and Adj.s like buğra:ğü:; also a Dev. Suff.
- a:ğu:/-e:gü: dominant; forms Collectives, usually fr. Numerals e.g. üçe:gü: 'three together', but see also ıçe:gü:, yüze:gü:.
- ñü: only(?) in esriñü: syn. w. esri: 'dappled'; also a Dev. Suff., but this word can hardly be a Dev. N./A.
- ru:/-rü: Directive Suff. meaning 'towards'; very rare; syn. w. -ğaru:/-gerü:.
- ğaru:/-gerü: Directive Suff. like -ru:/-rü:; hardly to be explained as that Suff. attached to the Dat., since it is attested in dialects earlier than those in which the Dat. Suff. -ka:/-ke: became -ğa:/-ge:; rather rare.
- layu:/-leyü: meaning 'like', e.g. börileyü: 'like a wolf'; properly Ger. in -u:/-ü: fr. a Den. V. in -la:-/le:-, but usually the only recorded form of the V. concerned.

- ç (after vowels) /-aç/-eç/-iç/-iç (after consonants) Dim. Suff.; very rare, esp. the last two.
- ğaç, etc. function obscure; only(?) in odğuç, kuşğaç, and perhaps süglç; also a Dev. Suff.
- leç certainly Turkish in üçleç; otherwise see List III.
- nç/-inç/-inç/-unç/-ünç the ordinary early Suff. of Ordinals; replaced in the medieval period by -nçi/-nçi; etc.; see also -nti.
- (F) -t a Sogdian Plur. Suff. found in tégit, tarxat Plurs. of tégin, tarka:n which are prob. very old l.-w.s.
- (-ta:ğ/-teg in words like antağ 'thus' is not a Suff. but the Postposition te:ğ fused w. the stem of ol.)
- liğ/-lig/-luğ/-lüğ forms Poss. N./A.s, see Kaş. I 500; very common.
- siğ/-sig forms N./A.s meaning 'resembling (something)' and the like; properly Dev. N./A.s in -ğ/-g fr. Simulative Den. V.s in -sı:-/si:-, but the actual V.s are seldom recorded; rare.
- k/ (after vowels and -r) -ak/-ek (the normal forms) /-ık/-ik/-uk/-ük (all rare) usually forms Dim. N.s, but also less restricted words like ortuk; fairly common.
- çak/-çek forms Conc. N.s, usually N.I.s, e.g. ağırçak 'spindle-whorl'; rare.
- çuk/-çük as correctly stated in Kaş. III 226 forms Dim. N.s, but generally w. a metaph. sense; e.g. baka: 'frog', baka:çuk 'muscle'; very rare in the early period, later became the commonest Dim. Suff.
- dak/-dek and also(?) -duk/-dük both very rare w. uncertain functions, see bağırdak, beliñdek, burunduk; in the last perhaps a crasis of -duruk; beliñdek might be a Dev. N./A. in -k fr. a Den. V. in -de:- fr. beliñ.
- ğa:k/-ge:k usually forms Conc. N.s, e.g. epek, kidizge:k, müñüzge:k, yañak; very rare, but a common Dev. Suff.
- ğuk dubious, only(?) in çamğuk; commoner as a Dev. Suff.
- lık/-lik/-luk/-lük usually forms A.N.s, but quite often Conc. N.s; its various usages are analysed in Kaş. I 505; 510-11.
- mak/-mek forms Conc. N.s, e.g. kögüzmek, but the connection w. the basic N. is sometimes tenuous; very rare, but common as a Dev. Suff.
- muk/-a:muk forms N.s some of which seem to be pejorative, e.g. kara:muk, sola:muk; very rare.
- ñak perhaps Dim.; only(?) in baka:ñak 'the frog in a horse's hoof'.
- rak/-rek forms Comparative Adjs.; common.
- duruk/-dürük usually forms N.s describing pieces of equipment, e.g. boyunduruk 'yoke'; rather rare; also a Dev. Suff.
- sa:k/-se:k properly Dev. N./A. fr. a Den. V. in -sa:-/se:- but the V. itself is sometimes not recorded; very rare attached to basic N.s, e.g. tavarsa:k, less rare attached to Dev. N.s in -ğ, etc., e.g. barığsa:k; see Kaş. I 24; II 55-6.
- suk/-sük function obscure; forms Conc. N.s, e.g. ilersük, bağırsuk, sıñarsuk and N.I.s, e.g. tañsuk; perhaps Dev. Suff. in -uk/-ük fr. Simulative Den. V.s in -sı:-/si:-.

- çıl/-çil forms N./A.s of addiction, e.g. igçil 'sickly' fr. i:ğ 'disease'; rare.
- ğıl/-ğil (a) attached to Numerals, e.g. üçgil 'triangular'; (b) otherwise forms N./A.s relating to colour or shape, e.g. başgil, targıl, kırğıl, yipgil, yalğıl; rare; also Dev. Suff.
- sıl in arsıl, syn. w. a:r, 'auburn'; prob. a Dev. N./A. in -ıl fr. a Simulative Den. V. in -sı:-; the alternative spelling arsal is improbable; both words are Hap. leg.
- ım/-im forms Conc. N.s, only(?) in eđrim, barım; a common Dev. Suff.
- dam/-dem forms N./A.s meaning 'resembling (something)', e.g. teđridem 'god-like'; rare.
- a:n/-e:n/-un an obsolete Plur. Suff. (see Kaş. I 76); only(?) in ođla:n, ere:n, bođun, and perhaps öze:n.
- çın/-çin function obscure; only(?) in balıkçın, kökçin/kökşin.
- tın/-tun/-dın/-dun, etc. a Loc. Suff., e.g. taştın 'outside'; to be distinguished fr. the partially homophonous Abl. Suff.
- ğa:n/-ge:n forms Conc. N.s w. a more restricted meaning than the basic N.; e.g. arpağa:n, temürge:n; very rare; also a Dev. Suff. and an Ending.
- ğun/-a:ğun etc. (also -ge:n in yettiđe:n) forms Collectives, e.g. alkuğun, kadna:ğun, kelipün; very rare; cf. -a:ğu:-/e:gü:-.
- ka:n/ke:n forms an Adj. in teđri:ken 'devout', and Temporal Advs. in amtıkan, ançağınçakan; very rare; also an Ending.
- (-man)/-men function obscure in (PU) kükmen, közmen; in Türkmen prob. a corruption of Pe. Suff. -mand 'resembling'; also a Dev. Suff.
- şin. See -çin.
- ıñ/-üñ Adj. Suff. in yélin 'windy'; Dim. Suff. in kölün 'puddle'; also a Dev. Suff.
- dañ/-duñ, etc. forms Conc. N.s only(?) in otuñ, uldañ, and perhaps izdeñ.
- ar/-er (also -rer in ikkirer)/-şar/-şer (after vowels) forms Distributives after Numerals, e.g. birer 'one each', and Adjs of quantity, e.g. azar 'a few each'; very rare; also a Dev. and Conjugational Suff.
- ş/-iş/-uş, etc. function obscure; see öđüş, bağış, 2 ba:ş, kökış; very rare; also a Dev. Suff.
- da:ş/-de:ş forms N.s of Association indicating that two persons have a common possession of some kind, e.g. kada:ş 'kinsman', yérde:ş 'compatriot'; see Kaş. I 406. It has been plausibly suggested that this Suff. is a crasis of the Loc. Suff. -da:-/de: and é:ş 'companion'. Rather rare.
- miş/-miş only in altmış, yétmış 'sixty, seventy', a common Conjugational Suff.
- gey only(?) in küçgey 'violent' fr. kü:ç 'violence'.
- z demonstrably a Den. N. Suff. only in ékkiz 'twin' fr. ékki; also a Dev. Suff. and an Ending.
- (-tüz in küntüz, q.v., is prob. a separate word not a Suff., cf. -ta:ğ.)
- sız/-siz/-suz/-süz forms Priv. N./A.s connoting the non-possession of a thing, quality, etc.; the opposite of -lığ, etc.; cognate to the Den. V. Suff. -sıra:-, etc.; very common.

(b) DEVERBAL (Dev. N.s)

- a:/-e:/-ı:/-i:/-u:/-ü taken together fairly common; there is no discoverable rule prescribing which Suff. should be attached to any given V., all being attached to V.s with unrounded and with rounded vowels; when one is attached to a V. ending in a vowel a euphonic -y- is inserted, e.g. ula:yu:. Usually forms Adv.s, less often Conjunctions, like ötrü:, Postposns. like tapa:, Conc. N.s like oprı:, ađrı:, A.N.s like 3 kéce: or Adjs. like egri:, köni:.
- ğa:/-ge: forms Adjs., e.g. kısğa:; N./A.s, usually Active, e.g. öge:, bilge:; and N.s either Intrans., e.g. köli:ge: or Pass., e.g. tilge:; rare and obsolescent; also an Ending.
- ma:/-me: forms Pass. N.s and N./A.s; fairly common; its use as an ordinary Dev. N., N.Ac., etc., prevalent in Osm., did not develop till the medieval period.
- ğma:/-gme: properly a Conjugational Suff.; occasionally forms N.s like tanığma: 'riddle'.
- cı:/-çi: forms N.Ag.s, e.g. ota:cı:, okı:cı:; common Den. Suff., very rare as a Dev. Suff.
- ğucı:/-gü:çi: properly a Conjugational Suff., see Kaç. II 49, but occasionally forms N.Ag.s, e.g. ayğucı:, bitigü:çi:.
- dı:/-di:, etc. a common Conjugational Suff., sometimes used to form Pass. N./A.s, usually attached to Refl. V.s, e.g. üdründi:, occasionally to basic V.s, e.g. ögdi:, alka:dı:, sökti:.
- tı:/-ti: different fr. the foregoing; used to form Adv.s., e.g. arıtı:, uza:tı:, tüke:ti:; very rare; also a Den. Suff.
- çu:/-çü: forms Pass. N./As; attached only to Refl. f.s; syn. w. -dı:, etc.; rare.
- du:, etc. in egdü:, umdu:, süktü: seems to be a Sec. f. of dı:.
- ğü:/-gü: properly a Conjugational Suff. but forms a good many N.s and N./As; rather more than half are N.I.s, e.g. bile:gü: 'whetstone'; most of the remainder are Conc. N.s, e.g. kedğü: 'clothing'; the rest are miscellaneous, e.g. oğla:ğü: 'gently nurtured'; it appears in crasis in words like ertiñü: and yaku:.
- (-yu:, etc.; see -a:, etc.)
- ç forms ordinary N.Ac.s, N./A.S.s, etc.; attached only to Refl. f.s (and tin-); prob. a crasis of -iş etc. which seems not to be attached to Refl. f.s in the early period; common.
- ğa:ç/-geç only(?) in bösgeç, a Conc. N., and kısğaç, a N.I. in the early period but commoner later; perhaps merely a Sec. f. of -ğuç.
- ğuç/-güç normally forms N.I.s, e.g. bıçğuç; rare; also a Den. Suff.
- maç/-meç forms names of foodstuffs, e.g. tutmaç; rare.
- t (only after -r-)/-ut/-üt dominant; forms N.Ac.s, A.N.s, and Conc. N.s which are usually Active; rare.
- ğut/-güt usually describes persons, e.g. alpa:gut, urunut, baya:gut, and (etymologically obscure) ura:gut; also forms A.N.s, etc. in ögüt, çapğut, kızğut, etc.; very rare and obsolescent.

- ğ/-ığ/-ig/-uğ/-üğ the commonest Dev. Suff.; forms a wide range of Dev. N.s and N./A.s, N.Ac.s, etc.; see Kaş. I 26-7.
- çığ/-çig forms Intrans. and Pass. N./A.s; attached only to Refl. f.s; perhaps a crasis of -çsiğ/-çsig, in which case the words concerned are N./A.s in -ğ fr. Simulative V.s in -sı:-/si:- fr. Dev. N.s in -ç.
- k (after vowels and -r-)/-ak/-ek/-ık/-ik of these -k is rather common, the rest rather rare. Practically syn. w. -ğ; there does not seem any discoverable rule for deciding which Suff. should be used, but on the whole most words ending in -ğ, etc. are N.s and most words ending in -k, etc. are N./A.s, but it also forms A.N.s, e.g. emge:k, kılık; Conc. N.s, e.g. kesek, and N.I.s, e.g. bıçak. See Kaş. I 27.
- uk/-ük (-ok/-ök) dominant (e.g. in ağruk, esrük); usually forms Intr. or Pass. N./A.s; also a few Pass. N.s, e.g. buyruk, köpük, kölük. Common.
- çak/-çek and -çuk/-çük not direct variants since the first is also attached to V.s containing rounded vowels and the second to V.s containing unrounded vowels; the semantic difference may be the same as that between -ak and -uk. Both form Conc. N.s and N.I.s; rare. Also a Den. Suff.
- dak/-dek it is doubtful whether this is a Dev. as well as a Den. Suff., but ördek looks more like a Dev. N. than a Den. N.
- duk, etc. properly a Conjugational form (Perfect Participle, etc.) but Kaş. I 65 may well be right in defining ağduk as a Dev. N./A. w. this Suff.
- ğa:k/-ge:k usually forms N./A.s connoting habitual or repeated action; also a few Conc. N.s, e.g. içgek, kuðurğa:k, and N.I.s, e.g. bıçğa:k, targğa:k w. the same connotation implied; cf. -ğa:n/-ge:n.
- ğuk/-gük forms Conc. N.s and some N.I.s; rare.
- ma:k/-me:k properly the Infinitive Suff., but also used to form a few Conc. N.s, e.g. çakma:k, and, with vocalic assimilation, ügrümük.
- duruk/-dürük forms N.s describing pieces of equipment, e.g. tizildürük; very rare; also a Den. Suff.
- sık/-sik forms N.Ac.s, usually Intrans.; properly the Suff. -k attached to a Simulative V. in -sı:-/sl:-, but the V.s themselves are not noted; rare.
- yuk/-yük properly a Conjugational Suff., see v. G. ATG, para. 218, but forms some Intrans. N./A.s; note the -n-y- crasis in bulğaıuk, etc.; rare.
- l (after vowels)/-ıl/-il forms N./A.s usually Intrans. or Pass.; rare.
- ğıl/-gil in kızğıl relates, like the Den. Suff., to colour; in bıçğıl forms a N.I.; very rare.
- m/-ım/-im/-um/-üm properly describes a single action, e.g. ölüm 'death' (you can only die once) or içim 'a single drink', but sometimes used less precisely as a N.Ac. or Conc. N.; common.
- n/-en-(?only in evren, tevren) /-ın/-in/-un/-ün partially dominant, see, e.g. uzun, tütün fr. uza:-, tüte:-, but after vowels -n is more usual; forms N./A.s and Conc. N.s, usually Intrans.; not very common.
- ğa:n/-ge:n properly a Conjugational form, Present Participle, but, at any rate in Kaş., connoting repeated or habitual action, see Kaş. I 24; II 53; fairly common; cf. -ğa:k/-ge:k; also a Den. Suff. and Ending.

- ğın/-gın (after unrounded vowels) /-ğun/-ğün (after rounded vowels) forms N.s and N./A.s, usually Intrans. or Pass.; not very common; -ğın/-ğün also a Den. Suff.
- ma:n/-me:n forms N.I.s; very rare; also a Den. Suff.
- ıj/-aıj (in çalanıj)/-üıj (in bürüıj) very rare; the full phonetic range is prob. wider; forms N.s and N./A.s, exact function obscure.
- çaıj only(?) in ayançaıj; perhaps connotes habitual action.
- ar/-er/-ır/-ir/-ur/-ür properly an Aor. Participial Suff.; forms a few N.s and N./A.s.
- mur only(?) in yağmur and perhaps çağmur.
- s only(?) in öles; ? Sec. f. of -z.
- ğas only(?) in bıçğas; perhaps Sec. f. of -ğaç.
- ş/-ıj/-ıj/-ıj/-uıj/-üıj there are perhaps two different series here, cf. -k, etc. and -uk/-ük; in some cases a vowel is followed by -ş but in others the -ıj, etc. are dominant, e.g. alkıj, ülüj, arvıj, busuıj, fr. alka:-, üle:-, arva:-, busa:-, and, although these words are N.Ac.s, in some cases, e.g. uruıj 'hitting one another', the action is reciprocal, in others, e.g. ağıj 'rising' it is neutral or at most co-operative; cf. the Dev. V. Suff. -ş-, etc. The connotation of 'a way of (doing something)', prevalent in Osm., is unknown in the early period. Common.
- z/-ız/-iz/-uz/-üz forms N.s and N./A.s, usually Intrans. or Pass., but precise function obscure; it is doubtful whether ıöz and uz should be regarded as Dev. N.s fr. ö:- and u:- as Bang suggested; very rare and obsolescent.
- duz forms an Intrans. N./A.; only(?) in munduz.

II. VERBAL SUFFIXES

(a) DENOMINAL (Den. V.s)

- a:-/e:-/ı:-/i:-/u:-/ü:- the first two fairly common, the rest rare; attached only to consonants; prob. the oldest Den. V. Suff., forms Intrans. and less often Trans. V.s; see Kaıj. I 20.
- da:-/de:-/ta:-/te:- rare and attached only to a limited range of consonants, forms only(?) Trans. V.s.
- ka:-/ke:- very rare; only(?) in ırınçke:- and yarlıka:-, and, in the Refl. f., ağrıkan-; in the last two the -k- is a crasis of -ğk-.
- ırka:-/ırka:-, etc. function obscure, very rare; see taırırka:-, tsoyorka:-, and, in the Refl. f., alpırkan-, özırken-; see the Dev. Suff. -ırkan-.
- la:-/le:- attached to all vowels and consonants; forms Trans. and Intrans. V.s; when attached to the names of parts of the body means 'to strike-on the . . .'; see Kaıj. I 22; much the commonest Den. Suff.
- ra:-/re:- a very rare Sec. f. of -la:-/le:-, e.g. kekre:-, kökre:-.
- sıra:-/sire:- forms Priv. Den. V.s meaning 'to be without, or deprived of, something', e.g. öğsire:-; cognate to the Den. N. Suff. -sız, etc.; rare and obsolescent.

- sa-/-se:- forms Desid. Den. V.s; fairly common; these V.s form two classes: (1) those derived fr. basic N.s, e.g. evse:- 'to long for home'; (2) those derived fr. N.Ac.s, e.g. barıḡsa:- 'to wish to go'. Also a Dev. Suff., equally common; in Kaş. I 281, 11 it is said that barsa:- is permissible, but barıḡsa:- the more usual form. See also I 279 ff.
- lı:- (-li:-) very rare Sec. f. of -la-/-le:-, e.g. tumlı:-.
- sı-/-si:- forms Simulative Den. V.s, e.g. açıḡsı:-; very rare in the basic f. but see -sın-/-sın-; see Kaş. I 282; also a Dev. Suff.
- d- (after vowels)/a:d-/-e:d- (after consonants) these V.s are usually Intrans. and mean 'to be, or become (something)', but occasionally Trans., e.g. köze:d-; as in the Perf. the -d- merged with the Suff. -tı-/-ti- and became -ttı-/-tti-; Kaş. erroneously indexed some of these V.s w. final -t- but it is unlikely that this was the pronunciation except in the Perf.
- it- (? -id-) the nature of this Suff. in töñit- and terit- is obscure.
- k- (only after vowels)/-ık-/-ik-/-uk-/-ük- forms Intrans., and occasionally Pass., V.s; see Kaş. I 20; II 118, 165; rather common.
- ı- forms Intrans. V.s, e.g. tusul-; very rare; also a Dev. Suff.
- sın-/-sın- the Refl. f. of -sı-/-si- forming Intrans. Simulative V.s; rare when attached to basic N.s, e.g. uluḡsın-, but fairly common when attached to N.S.A.s in -m, etc., e.g. alımsın- translated in Kaş. I 20 'to pretend to take, without actually taking'; see also II 202, 259; there are several hybrid forms like begımsın- in which -im- is inserted between the basic N. and the Suff.
- r- (after vowels) /-ar-/-er- (the ordinary form after consonants) /-ır-/-ir- (very rare, after Dis. N.s in which the second vowel, -ı-/-i-, is elided, e.g. kurḡır- fr. kurıḡ) forms Intrans. V.s; see Kaş. II 163; fairly common.
- ḡar-/-ger-/-kar- (after -)/(-ker-ḡ) normally forms Trans. V.s, occasionally Intrans.; fairly common.
- ḡır-/-gir- forms Inchoative V.s meaning 'almost to do (something); to be on the point of doing (something)', (see Kaş. II 200, which relates to Dev. V.s); e.g. tazḡır-, tozḡır-; very rare; also a Dev. Suff.
- ş- identical w. the Dev. Suff. -ş-, etc.; noted only in arkaş-.

(b) DEVERBAL (Dev. V.s)

- sa-/-se:- forms Desid. V.s; see Kaş. I 21; also a Den. Suff.; fairly common.
- sı-/-si:- forms Simulative V.s, e.g. emsi:-; very rare; also a Den. Suff.
- d- Trans. and prob. Emphatic in to:d-, ko:d-, yo:d-, yü:d-.
- t- (after vowels and -r-) /-ıt-/-it-/-ut-/-üt- the only common Suff. of Caus. V.s fr. basic V.s ending in vowels; the other forms are rather rare. See Kaş. I 20.
- k- (after vowels and -r-) /-ık-/-ik-/-uk-/-ük- when attached to Intrans. V.s intensifies the meaning, e.g. a:ç- 'to be hungry'; açık- 'to be famished', see Kaş. I 20; when attached to Trans. V.s forms either Pass. V.s, e.g. sañç- 'to rout'; sañçık- 'to be routed'; or Intrans. V.s, e.g. böl- 'to divide, separate' (Trans.); bölük- 'to separate, part' (Intrans.); rather rare.
- tık-/-duk- forms Emphatic Pass. V.s, only(?) in bulduk-, bastık-.

- sık-/-sik-/-suk-/-sük- forms Emphatic Pass. V.s, e.g. bil- 'to know'; bilsik- 'to be well known, notorious'; see Kaş. I 21; II 138, 237; rare.
- l-/-il-/-il-/-ul-/-ül- the normal Suff. for Pass. V.s; see Kaş. I 21; II 138, 237; very common.
- n-/-in-/-in-/-un-/-ün- forms Refl. V.s, which acc. to Kaş. had four shades of meaning 'to do something to oneself, for oneself, or by oneself; or pretend to do something but not actually do it' (the last practically unknown elsewhere); it was also used to form Intrans. and sometime Pass. V.s fr. Trans.; see Kaş. I 21, II 168, 254; very common.
- ırkan-/-irken- in isirken-, kısırkan-; function obscure; see Den. V.Suff. -ırka:-.
- r- (in one or two V.s, ürper-, kurır, yélpir-, etc.)/-çır-/-çir- (in tañçır-külçir-)/-ğır-/-gir- (perhaps occasionally -ğur-/-gür-; rare) /-sir- (in külsir-) all form Inchoative V.s; see the Den. Suff. -ğır-/-gir-.
- (ar-)/-er-/-ur-/-ür-, attached only to consonants, the first two very rare, the second two fairly common, form Caus. V.s, see Kaş. II 87, 199.
- dur-/-dür-/-tur-/-tür-, attached only to consonants, the commonest Suff. for forming Caus. V.s; see Kaş. I 20; II 197.
- ğur-/-gür- attached only to a limited range of consonants, forms Caus. V.s; see Kaş. II 198; rather rare.
- şur-/-şür- (occasionally in the Sec. f. -çur-/-çür-) is not a primary Suff. but a combination of -ş- and -ur-, the preceding vowel often being elided, e.g. tap-, tapış-, tapşur-.
- ş- (only after vowels)/-ış-/-iş-/-uş-/-üş- forms Co-operative and Reciprocal V.s which, according to Kaş., meant 'to do (something) together (with a Plur. Subject); to do (something) in every part (with a Sing. Subject); to do (something) to one another (with a Plur. Subject); to help (someone Dat.) to do (something Acc.); to compete with (birle:, someone) in doing (something Acc.). N. See Kaş. I 20; II 113 ff., 225; common.
- uz-/-üz- (dominant, e.g. tüte:-, tütüz-)/-duz-/-düz-/-ğuz-/-güz- form Caus. V.s; obviously cognate to -ur-, etc. (cf. -sız-, -sıra:-); acc. to Kaş. II 87 -duz- was an Oğuz Suff.; see also II 164; all rare in the early period; became commoner, and in some languages almost standard, in the later period.

ENDINGS

- ğa-/-ge, which was a rare and obsolescent Dev. N. suffix, also appears at the end of a larger number of words which cannot be so explained. Some are pretty certainly not l.-w.s, others, like sırıçğa: 'crystal, glass' prob. are. The list includes one, perhaps significant, pair. avıçğa: 'old man', kurtğa: 'old woman', and several names of animals and insects çekürge:, (PU) çınçırğa:, torığa:, kumursğa:, karğa:, karınçğa:, kaşğa:, sarıçğa:, etc.
- va:ç-/-wa:ç in sanduwa:ç, yala:vaç is the Iranian word (and Suff.) wāç 'voice'.

- dîç occurs in tardıç, savdıç, sağdıç.
- la:ç/-lıç in ıkrı:la:ç, ıplıç, tođlıç, karğıla:ç, sokarlaç, sondıla:ç, three of them names of birds, is prob., but not demonstrably, foreign.
- ğa:n/-ge:n (also Den. and Dev. Suffs.)/-ka:n/-ke:n occurs at the end of several names of animals: tavışğa:n (a very old word), tayğa:n, sıçğa:n, sağızğa:n, sıkırkan, etc., and of plants: çıbıka:n, tuturka:n, kara:kan, kövürgen, etc.
- la:n occurs at the end of the names of several animals arsla:n, bakla:n, bula:n, bursla:n, kapla:n, kula:n, sırtla:n ('hyaena', first noted in the medieval period), yıla:n, and one title çoğla:n.
- va:r in çığılva:r, yala:var is an Iranian Suff. meaning 'carrying'.
- z occurs at the end of three numerals: ottuz, tokkuz, sekkiz; several names of parts of the human or animal body: ağız, boğuz, büñüz, tiz, köküz, köz; and several names of animals and insects: uyaz, toğuz, kunduz, etc., as well as miscellaneous words like yıltız and yultuz. None of these are likely to be l.-w.s.

Mon. A

Preliminary note. There were never many Turkish words consisting of a single vowel, and all of them except a: became obsolete at a very early date. To Kaş., with his background of Arabic philology, the whole concept was strange, but he did devote a section, headed rather inscrutably dawātu'l-arba'a, 'four-letter words', I 39-40, in the chapter containing two-letter words of which the first is hamza to such words. It originally contained one word hamza alif, four hamza wāw, and three hamza yā, but in the surviving MS. some of the second group have had letters added to them. As w is not a genuine Turkish sound, the second group must all have been o:, u:, ö:, or ü:. Of the third group one was almost certainly ay, the others probably i: or i:. The only common word, i:, occurs in Kaş. as yī:, its true nature and meaning having already been forgotten.

a: Exclamation, usually vocative in character, occasionally expressing surprise, in the early period usually affixed to the word qualified, later, perhaps under foreign influence, placed before it. The attachment of -a/-e metri gratia at the end of lines in KB and other poems is a Pe. trick, and perhaps not native Turkish. S.i.a.m.l.g., but also in contiguous non-Turkish languages. Uyğ. VIII ff. Bud. tüzün oğlum-a 'my good son' U III 35, 26; anaçım-a 'my dear mother' U III 9, 2 (ii); baxşı-a 'my teacher' U IV 28, 4; a.o.o.: Xak. XI a: an exclamation (harf) of surprise (al-tahayyur); hence one says ol meni: a: kıldı: 'he surprised me' Kaş. I 39: KB -a is a common verse-filler, e.g. tuş teğ-a (or -e?) rhyming with sağa 7: Çağ. xv ff. a: (sic) 'vocative' (harf-i midā) San. 27v. 1 (quottn. including a: yığıt 'oh youth'; also described as an abbreviation of an in such words as alar for antlar): Kom. XIV e 'vocative exclamation' CCG; Gr. 84 (quottn.): Kip. xv 'vocative' (al-munādi wa'l-mufriğ) a e.g. a kışi (for kışi) 'oh man' Tuh. 60b. 2 (also 84b. 3; 85b. 7); harful-nidā ā (also ē) placed before the name of a person called, e.g. a Altunbuğa Kav. 52, 11.

I i: usually translated 'vegetation', but the contexts show that it meant something between a plant and a tree, probably 'bush' (singular or collective); n.o.a.b. Türkü VIII ida: taşda: kalmışi: 'those of them who remained in the bush and stony desert' T 4; atığ ika: bayu:r ertimiz 'we tied the horses to bushes' T 27:

Uyğ. VIII ida: kavuşalım 'let us assemble in the bush' Şu. E 10-11; VIII ff. Man.-A bēş törlüg ida ıgacda 'in the five kinds of bushes and trees' M I 8, 19-20; kaltı ıg yanı yerden tēmin örtürürce 'as one can grow bushes almost immediately on newly planted ground' M I 14, 10; bir narwan(?) atığ i a bush called narwan(?) (Persian nārwan 'witch elm, Ulmus montana) Man.-uig. Frag. 400, 4; ol i uçında olurdu 'he sat on the top of that bush' do. 401, 1; Man. ne tağları i ıgac kaya kum barı 'whatever mountains, bushes, trees, rocks, and sand there are' M III 8, 3-4 (ii): Bud. (fruits that grow) i ıgacda U I 27, 5; i tariğ 'bushes and cultivated land' U I 27, 3; U II 77, 27; TT IV 10, 6; VIII K.4; a.o.o.: Xak. XI one says yī: yığa:ç for 'tangled trees' (mā'ıffa minā'l-sacar), originally yığl: 'bushy' (mutarāş) but contracted Kaş. III 216 (perhaps a false etymology); a.o. III 25 (yıği:).

PU 2 i: Hap. leg.; apparently so vocalized in MS. Xak. XI i: 'a word used to express refusal' (kalimatu'l-inkār) alternative to 2 u: Kaş. I 40.

PU ?F 3 i: Hap. leg.; like many names of fabrics prob. a l.-w., perhaps Chinese; apparently vocalized ay; if i: or l: perhaps some Chinese word like i 'variegated, rainbow-coloured (clothing)' (Giles 5,434). Xak. XI i: 'orange-coloured brocade' (dībāc nāncāyū'l-laww) Kaş. I 40.

PU 1 o: Hap. leg.; the word, no doubt hamza wāw was inadvertently omitted in the MS. and replaced in the margin by o:ka: presumably taken from the example; it is not clear whether this word is an abbreviation of oğ, which appears as below and elsewhere in the medieval period, or whether the latter is an expanded form, prob. the latter. Xak. XI <0: al-kafil, 'surety, security, pledge'; one says men anı: o:ka: aldım 'I took him as security' (kaffaltu bihi) Kaş. I 40; (xiv Muh.(?) damana wa kafala 'to stand surety') o:ğlan- Rif. III (only); Xwar. XIV man takallafa li 'whoever has guaranteed to me' translated kayu . . . maga oğ bolsa Nahc. 346, 7; same phr. 162, 6 and 15.

PU 2 o: Hap. leg.; originally hamza wāw, but later a fatha was placed over the hamza and an atif added in both places. Xak. o: 'an exclamation (harf) in reply to a caller'. When yā Muḥammad is called out, the man who answers says o: meaning 'what are your orders?' Kaş. I 40 (see 2 u:).

S 3 o: See 01.

I u: 'sleep'; the Dev. V. is exceptionally uđı-, which suggests that this word may originally have been u:đ, but that word is nowhere noted in this sense; not noted later than XI. Türkü VIII uđa: basdırm 'we surprised' . . . in their sleep' I E 35, 37; II E 27; uka (sic) basdırmız T 27; VIII ff. Man. usınta ođuntı 'he woke from his sleep' M I 6, 21-1; Uyg. VIII ff. Man. (gap) uu (sic) üze uđıyru 'sleeping a . . . sleep' TT III 160; Bud. uvularındın (? read uularındın) ođğurup 'arousing . . . from their sleep' U III 11, 8; u TT VIII A.13 (see uđık); Civ. uđa Usp. 77, 14 (see uđ-); Xak. XI u: (later altered to udu:) 'sleep' (al-nawm); hence one says uđı:đırm 'I slept', abbreviated from u:đı:đırm Kaş. I 40; u:đın (MS. in error uđın) anı: ođğura: 'arousing him from sleep' II 103, 4; similar phr. I 46, 20; ağır unı: uçursa:đım 'I wished to drive away heavy sleep' III 247, 23; KB u teg 'like sleep' 1424; kiterse üü 'let him repel sleep' 2331; o.o. 3952, 4963, 6637.

PU 2 u: (bi-işbâ'î-alif) Hap. leg.; in Kaş. işbâ' normally means 'back-vowels', e.g. both I tō:z and tū:z are so described to distinguish them from tō:z and tū:z, but, if some contrast with 2 o: is intended, it might mean, as in San., u not o, since ü: is not a very likely sound for an exclamation; see 2 ı:. Xak. XI u: 'an exclamation of refusal (harf inkâr) to obey an order' (Kaş. I. 40).

Mon. V. A-

Preliminary note. The only two basic verbs of this shape are u:- and ö:-; in various medieval and modern languages more such verbs appeared as the result of the elision of final consonants, e.g. e-|l- (< I er-) 'to be'.

u:- there are a few early occurrences of this verb as an ordinary finite verb meaning 'to be capable' and the like, but it is normally used as an Aux. verb following a verb in the Ger. f. -u:-/ü-, or less often -ğalı:/-ğelli:, meaning 'to be able'. Even in this sense the word is rare after XI except in the Neg. f. The Pres. Partic. uğa:n, however, used as a N./A. meaning 'God; Almighty' survived rather longer. The later history of the Neg. f. is discussed by Mal. in Usp., pp. 224-5. Briefly the Ger. suff. -u:-/ü: and u:- coalesced to produce -urna-/üme- the 'Impossible' f. of the verb. This stage was reached in Osm. in the early medieval period, but later, probably as the result of a general tendency to 'unround' round vowels, this became -ama-/eme-, producing such forms as Osm. seve-me- 'to be unable to love'. It has been suggested that in such forms the -a-/e- is a reduced form of al- which is used as an Aux. verb in the same sense in some modern languages, but this is improbable. It is more plausible that the Osm. Continuous Pres. Suffix -uyor (not subject to phonetic harmony) is a survival of the positive form of u:-. Türkü VIII etinu: yaratunu: umaduk 'because they could not organize themselves (Hend.)' I E 10, II E 9; usar 'if possible' T 11; VIII ff. kanişayru: uma:tı:n 'without being able to move' Irkb 16 (and four o.o. of Neg. f.); edğüsü: uyuru: 'his good and capable men' do. 28; otsuz: suvsuz kaltı: uyu:n 'how can I (get on) without fodder or water?' do. 45; (the fat horse's mouth became hard) ıdı:sl: uma:z 'its master cannot (control it)' do. 65; ada:rtu: uma:z 'cannot endanger him' Toyoğ 25, 29 (ETY II 59); Uyg. VIII ff. 1 ap/ep, etc. Reduplicative intensifying prefix, usually placed before N./A.s connoting colour or physical shape. Occasionally at later periods the two words are fused, and the compound thus formed entered in dicts.; in such cases the final consonant of the prefix is sometimes doubled. Other such prefixes are listed below. C.i.a.p.a.l. Uyg. viii ff. Bud. for a possible occurrence see 2 ap; Xak. x1 ap/ep 'a strengthening and intensifying particle' (harf ta'kid wa mubālağa); to describe something 'particularly good' one says ep edgü; and in Oğuz for 'intensely white' ap ak . . . up/üp 'a strengthening particle for [words connoting] colours'; hence one says, in Çiğil, üp ürlüp 'intensely white' Kaş. I 34: xiv Muh. şadidü'l-bayād 'intensely white' ap ak Mel. 68, 5; Rif. 168: Çağ. xv ff. San. 16v. 8 ff. contains a short note on prefixes of this nature, enumerating several of them, ap (ağ), sap (sarığ), etc.; some of these reappear in the lexicon, e.g. ap ('with p') ağ/jak 'very white' 27v. 7; Xwar. xiii(?) ap ak Oğ. 231: Kıp. xiii Hou. 31, 4 ff. has a note on such prefixes and lists several, ap (ak), kap (kara); etc.: xiv appak şadidü'l-bayād, followed by a note and another example Id. 7: xv Kaw. 5, 4 ff. and Tuh. 85a. 6 ff. have similar notes with examples appak, etc.: Osm. xiv ff. Several examples, from all periods, appak, apansızda, apansızına, etc. TTS I 1, 32; II 44; III 30; IV 32.

2 ap a Conjunction unique in having a Neg. connotation and being used with the positive form of the verb (the meaning was not understood by F. W. K. Müller and he mistranslated U II 4, 2-3). There are two usages, (1) ap . . . ap 'neither . . . nor'; (2) Neg. verb . . . ap 'nor', sometimes followed by positive verb. Not traceable later than Tef. Uyg. viii ff. Bud. bilmmezler ap nomluğ(?) yoluğ ukarlar 'they do not know [the way and direction], nor do they understand the way of the Law' U II 4, 2-3; ap yeme közlünür ajunda ap yeme ikinti ajunda 'neither in this world nor the next' U II 86, 8-9; o.o. Siv. 528, 2-3; Tif. 48a. 3; USp. 102, 33-9; in a long list in TT VII 40, 77 beginning 'if any monk or nun, lay brother or lay sister' the words ap ayağılığ ap ayağs:z uluğ kiçig can hardly mean 'neither honourable nor dishonourable, great and small', and this must be a rather unusual use of 1 ap 'very honourable, very dishonourable': Xak. x1 ap a word taking the place of la, 'not', as in ap bu; ap ol 'neither this nor that' Kaş. I 34; KB (the mind of an ignorant man is like a sand dune) ögüz kirse tolmaz ap ot yem önür 'if the river comes in it does not fill, nor do spices and fragrant herbs grow on it' 075; xiii(?) ap yeme könl ol ap yeme yaruk bitig 'neither is he upright nor is [his] writing clear'; yétmes anlarka ziyân ap yeme aşiğ 'no harm nor advantage comes to them' Tef. 35.

a:v originally prob. a Conc. N. 'wild game', but from the earliest period also used abstractly for 'hunting wild game'. S.i.a.m.l.g. except NE where the synonymous word ap (3 ep, q.v.) is used. From about x1 onwards the sound change v > w took place in some languages, and in case of doubt it has been transcribed aw. e:v basically 'dwelling place', with the particular connotation of a separate dwelling place, the exact meaning, 'tent, house', etc. depending on local circumstances. In some literary texts it also has the same metaph. meanings as Ar. bayt, e.g. 'celestial mansion'. C.i.a.p.a.l. The phonetic history is unusual; the original form was e:v, but this had become ew in some languages by x1 and from this followed the development ew > üw > üwl > üy; üy, less often öy, is the normal form in all modern language groups except NE, where it has undergone further distortions, and SW where ev still survives, as it does sporadically elsewhere. The phr. ev bark 'dwelling and movable property' is common, particularly in the early period. Türkü VIII ev 'dwelling place', presumably 'tent' is very common and ev bark occurs 3 or 4 times, see ETY Index and bark: VIII ff. ev occurs in Irkb 5, 9 and 55, but not 8 (see evin): Uyğ. VIII ff. Man., Bud. ev and ev bark are common, see Caf. and TT I-V Index, etc.: Xak. xi the word is very common, but the main entry, Kaş. I 81 (53, 7 of the facsimile) is confused. It is in a section devoted to words beginning with long vowels and comes between a:v (alif alif vā) and l a:k (alif alif qāf), but is spelt alif vā and translated al-bayt, bi-işnāmī'l-alif, wa'l-qaşr fihī aṣṣah 'dwelling place, with a front vowel, the form with a short vowel is more correct', which clearly implies that it should be spelt e:v in this entry, though ev is more correct in current usage; 'the Turks call al-bayt ev, and they [i.e. the Oğuz and related tribes] *ew I 32, 1; a.o. Dis. ABA aba:/I apa:/ebe:/epe: words of this form, connoting various terms of relationship abound in modern Turkish languages with meanings as various as (1) 'ancestor'; (2) 'grandfather'; (3) 'grandmother'; (4) 'father'; (5) 'mother'; (6) 'paternal uncle'; (7) 'paternal aunt'; (8) 'elder brother'; (9) 'elder sister'; (10) (presumably metaph.) 'midwife'. Some, e.g. aba: 'paternal uncle', an abbreviation of Mong. abaga, and other words beginning ab . . ., etc. are certainly foreign; others, often occurring in only one language group, are of unknown origin. The only early forms seem to be Türkü, etc. apa: 'ancestor' and Oğuz ebe: 'mother'. Kaş. does not record the former, but it occurs in KB. In this early period it is often impossible to be sure whether the vowels are back or front and the consonant voiced or unvoiced; the following are the likeliest transcriptions. Türkü viii eçü:m apam 'my ancestors' I E 1, II E 3; I E 13, II E 12; eçü:miz I E 19; Oğuz I 1; apa: also occurs as an element in P.N.s, possibly as a title, e.g. apa tarxan T 34; this phr. occurs in Chinese refcs. to the Türkü and seems to be interpreted as 'commander-in-chief', see Liu Mau-tsai, Die chinesischen Nachrichten zur Geschichte der Ost-Türken, T'u-kiie, index, s.v. A-po-ta-kan: Uyg. viii ff. Man. (the god Zurvan who is) eçesi (sic?) apası 'the ancestor' (of all the other gods) M I 22, 3 (ii): Civ. Tartış apam possibly 'my ancestor Tartış' USP. 12, 2: Tibetan (sic) xi PU aba: al-áb 'father' Kaş. I 86 (said to be an Arabic l.-w., with an absurd pseudo-historical explanation; 'father' in Tibetan is a-p'a): Xak. xi KB ajunka apa énmışinde berü 'since our ancestors came down to earth' 219; apa oğlanı 'ancestors and their descendants' 1386, 1732, 1922, 1958, etc.; apa yazdı erse 'if an ancestor has sinned' 3520; a.o. 3522 (evin): Çağ. PU ebe cadd, 'ancestor' (and in Rümi, zan-i qabila 'midwife'); apa ('with -p-') xvâhar-i buzurg 'elder sister', also called éçeçl (Mong. l.-w.) San. 27v. 5; ebem kömçel a plant called panirah and nân-i kulâğ in Pe. and xubbâzi in Ar., 'the round-leaved mallow' do. 27v. 15: Oğuz xi ebe: al-umm 'mother', pronounced with -p- by the Karluk Türkmen Kaş. I 86: Kıp. xiv ebe: al-umm wa aştulu l'il-cadda wa yuqälli l-umm 'alâ tarigil-tahannum originally 'female ancestor', used for 'mother' as a term of respect Id. 7; ebem eçkinis koştu: qawis quzah 'rainbow' (lit. 'my mother has collected her goats') Id. 7; Bul. 3, 1: xv cadda (dede in margin) ebe Tuh. 11a. 11: Osm. xiv ff. ebe; in xiv and xv ebe seems to mean 'grandmother' TTS I 252; II 357, by xviii it meant 'midwife' (see Çağ.); it is also noted in one or two phr. including ebem gömçel II 358; IV 274.

PU 2 apa: 'bear' (animal); 'bear' is normally 1 ađıđ, but there is a good deal of folklore, mixed up with an ancestor-cult, about bears in Siberia, and this word is prob. merely 1 apa: used metaph.; survives in NE Kaç., Koib., Sag. R I 620 and Khak. aba, same meaning. Kıp. xi (PU) apa: 'with back vowels' al-dubb 'bear': . . . apa: başı: al-tannüm 'Cannabis sativa'; it is a plant which grows like al-qittâ 'Cucumis sativus' and has a thorny stem, it is eaten in the mountains I 86 (this is the normal meaning of al-tannüm but the description hardly agrees with it).

ava: an exclamation; as such Hap. leg. (?), but of a class common in Turkish. Xak. xi ava: harf ta'allum 'exclamation of pain, equivalent to Ar. wâwayli'; a man who is in pain says ava: ava: Kaş. I 89.

oba:, etc. Preliminary note. There are three early words of this general form; the only one certainly Turkish is uva:; oba: 'clan' is Oğuz and may well be a l.-w., though not demonstrably so; PU obo: 'white cosmetic' is prob. a Chinese l.-w. Ova 'plain' is peculiar to Osm. and seems to be quite a modern word. Oba: 'heap of stones, grave mound' and the like, noted from Kom. xiv CCI onwards is a l.-w. fr. Mong. obo (Kow. 370, Haldod 78).

oba: name of a small social unit, possibly 'clan', but prob. even smaller, 'extended family' and the like; from this the word came to mean 'the dwelling place of such a unit; small encampment or large tent', and thence more generally 'tent, hut', and the like; survives in these later senses in Osm., including Rep. Turkish and Anat. (SDD 1081, 1411), and Tkm. (o:ba) only(?). Oğuz xi oba: al qabila 'clan' (?), an imprecise word Kaş. I 86: Çağ. xv ff. oba 'the small tents (çaymahâ) which nomads pitch and in which they reside, when they stop somewhere; and metaph. the place where they stop' San. 58r. 22: Osm. xiv ff. oba c.i.a.p., in xiv to xvi it seems to mean 'a small encampment', in a xiv text an ev qawmī 'the family living in one tent' is more important than one man, and an oba qawmī 'the families living in a small encampment' are more important than an ev qawmī; from xvi onwards it seems to mean 'a tent or hut', particularly a large one occupied by more than one family TTS I 533; II 713; III 530; IV 596.

D uva: Dev. N. in -a; fr. uv-; pec. to Kaš. Xak. xi uva: 'a kind of food' (ta'am); to make it rice is cooked and thrown in cold water; then it is drained and mixed with ice (or 'snow?', camd) and eaten to cool one (li'l-burūda) Kaš. I 90; 'a kind of food is called uwa: (sic) derived fr. the word uwdi: (sic), fatta, because sugar is crushed in it' I 11, 20.

VU ?F oṗo: 'a white cosmetic or face powder', contrast eṗlik 'rouge'; prob. a Chinese l.-w., the second syllable perhaps po 'white' (Giles 8,556); survives in NE Šor oba R I 1157; Tel. obo R I 1159; SE Türki upa Shaw, Jarring, etc. (and Tar. upta R I 1782); NC Kir. upa; Kz. opa; cf. *kirše:n. where it is very common. With one dubious exception the only known form is evükmedim in a standard formula in funerary inscriptions. It takes the Dat. and is used in contrast to adrl- 'to be separated from', e.g. (xanımka): élimke: evükmedim kuyda: kuñcuymka: adrlıtım Mal. 8, 1-2, which must mean something like 'I could not stay with my xan and realms; I have been separated from my wife in the women's quarters'. The object of adrl- is nearly always a person, wife, son, etc., that of evük- more often an institution, ruler, realm, and the like. Radloff (R IV 1876) is prob. right in suggesting that it should be transcribed evük-; if so it can be taken as a *Den. D uvul- Pass. f. of uv-; 'to be crushed, broken into small pieces'; s.i.a.m.l.g., usually as uval-/juval-/jufal-, but Osm., as well as ufal-, has oĝul- (pronounced ovul-, ovul-) 'to be rubbed, kneaded', which seems to be a survival of this word. The rare Türkü word hitherto transcribed opul- might be a Pass. f. of o:p-, but the meaning 'to be swallowed' is awkward, and it is perhaps likelier that it should be transcribed uful- and taken as a Sec. f. of this word. Türkü VIII (gap) binip oplayu: teĝip sança: ıdıp at ufulu:(?) ünti: yana: aĝıtrp (gap) 'he mounted . . . and attacked, panting with fury and plying his lance; his horse was crushed(?); he got up, making it stand up again' Ix. 19; (gap) ülüĝl: ança: ermiş erinç yaĝı:ka: yalnu:s oplayu: teĝip ufulu: kırıp özi: kişĝa: kerĝek bulrı: 'his fate was, it seems, this; panting with fury and attacking the enemy all alone, entering (the battle) and being crushed, he met his end at an early age' Ix. 23; Xak. XI uvuldi: ne:p 'the thing was crushed' (futta) Kağ. I 197 (uvulur, uvul-ma:k); Kip. xv ğuşıya ilayhi 'to faint' uvul-, PU apam/apap 'if', used with the Conditional mood. The earlier form is fairly common in Uyğ., the later is not traceable after xiv. In the early period the -sar form was not always strictly Conditional, and this word perhaps became superfluous and fell into disuse when its usage became more restricted; the word was sometimes used by itself and sometimes followed by birök. Von Le Coq in Turan, 1918, p. 457 stated, without giving a reference, that F. W. K. Müller described this word as an 'Aramaeo-Sogdian ideogram'; this is complete nonsense, apparently based on a misunderstanding of the Sogdian 'ideogram' 'P' and', sometimes followed by 2y, which was formerly read ny. İç 'the interior, or inside (of something)'; originally, and often still, in a concrete sense.

The word early acquired a number of specific connotations, esp. in its derivatives :- (1) 'the interior of the human body' (cf. İçe:ğü:); (2) 'inner', as opposed to outer, clothing (cf. İçton); (3) 'the interior of a household, esp. a royal household' (cf. İçre:kl:); (4) secret, or mental processes, as opposed to physical. With the 3rd Pers. Suffix in the Dat., Abi., and Loc. it serves as a Postposition meaning 'into, from within, within'. In a few phr., the older of which are listed as main entries, it has been fused with another word to form a compound word. Dis. ACA eçe: etc. Preliminary note. There are in some modern languages, esp. NE and SW XX Anat., a good many words of the form ACA which are terms of relationship or respect. Some are certainly Mong. loan-words, e.g. ece 'master' and various forms of eçge 'father', and others may be. The only certain old Turkish words of this form are eçe:, eçli:, and eçü:.

eçe: both this word and eke:, q.v., seem to have meanings straddling the generations (see eçli:); this word meaning both 'one's mother's younger sister' and 'one's own elder sister' and eke: both 'one's father's younger sister' and 'one's own elder sister'; this would explain why this word survives in residual form in NW and SW attached to tay (tağay:, q.v.) to give the meaning 'maternal aunt' (Osm. teyze). As an independent word survives only(?) in SW xx Anat. ace, ece, ede, İci SDD 67, 503-5, 780 which all mean, inter alia, 'elder sister'. Xak. xi eçe: syn. w. eke:; that is al-uxtu'l-kubrā 'elder sister'; the -ç- was changed from -k- as in Ar. carm from garm and cunhad from gunbad Kaş. I 86 (this phonology is absurd; both words with initial g- (so marked in the text) are Pe. l.-w. and the sound change is normal in such cases); Çağ. eçe ('with -ç-') zan-i musinna 'anelderly woman' San. 32v. 4.

I eçli: as pointed out in K. Gronbech, 'The Turkish System of Kinship', in Studia Orientalia . . . Johanni Pedersen dicata, Munkegaard, 1953, this word means 'a close male relative younger than one's father and older than oneself', i.e. both (junior) paternal uncle and 'elder brother'. It soon lost its first meaning, and in the medieval period was displaced almost everywhere by the synonymous Mong. l.-w. ağa (aka); it survives, however, in SW xx Anat. in forms like those quoted under eçe:. Türkü VIII eçli:m xağan olurtı: 'my (junior) paternal uncle ascended the throne' IE 16, II E 14, a.o.o. in this sense; ini:li: eçli:li: kikşü:rtükli:n üçün: 'because (the Chinese) aroused mutual enmity between younger Kir. ix ff. eçli:eçli: is fairly common, and might have either meaning Mal. 6, 2 etc.: Xak. xi eçli: al-axu'l-akbar sinna(m) 'elder brother' Kaş. I 87; III 7 (yurç:) KB ata bardı eş tuş eçli yä inli 'your father has gone and your comrades and elder and younger brothers' 3784 (prob. spurious); XIII(?) Tef. eçli synonymous with Ar. 'amm' 'paternal uncle' 86; Kip. xiv eçli: al-'amm İd. 9; al-'amm eççi: Bud. 9, 3 (cim in both).

VU 2 eçli: Hap. leg.; prob. a Sec. f. of eçü:. Barsğan: xi eçli: al-şahla 'an old man (or woman)' Kaş. I 87.

eçü: seems to mean rather vaguely 'ancestor'; very rare; perhaps survives in SW xx Anat. acu 'grandfather' (also 'elder brother') SDD 69. Türkü VIII eçüm apam, etc. see 1 apa:; Uyg. viii ff. Man. eçesi (sic) do.: Xak. xi KB (in an invocation of God) ay mengü eçü 'oh everlasting ancestor' 10.

uça: (?uca:) an anatomical term used both for men and animals, 'the loins, haunches, rump', and the like; s.i.m.m.l.g., with voiced consonant in some NE languages and SW Osm., perhaps the original pronunciation. Uyg. viii ff. açı:- (? acı:-) originally 'to be bitter' in a physical sense, later also 'to be sour'; at a very early date developed several metaph. meanings, the commonest (of a disease, etc.) 'to be painful', hence (of a person) 'to feel pain', and hence

'to feel the pain of others, to feel compassion'; in most languages the original physical meaning is lost; Sami, 22, says that in Osm. ağrı-connotes deep-seated pain, acı:- superficial, but more acute and lasting pain, and si-intermittent muscular or nervous pain. Dis. AÇĞ acquired metaph. meanings 'grievous, painful', and in some languages 'anger, angry'. S.i.a.m.l.g. w. phonetic changes; in some NW and SW languages there is a curious development, aç being used for 'bitter, painful', and açık for 'anger'. The latter might be taken as a Dev. Man.-A açığ emgek 'grievous pain' M I 9, 6; Bud. açığ ünin sığta[yu] 'sobbing in a doleful voice' U III 13, 5 (i); ağazımtaki tatağlar . . . açığ bolup 'the sweet tastes in my mouth becoming bitter' U III 37, 30-2; açığ emgek U IV 30, 34; 40, 188: o.o. TT VII 40, 25-6; Suv. 514, 15 (tarka): Civ. açığ nara 'a bitter pomegranate' H II 16, 2; (when two hearts are linked as one) êldin xandin açığ bolur mu 'can there come distress from the realm or ruler?' TT I 179: Xak. xi açığ 'anything bitter' (murr) *Kaş. D 2 açığ, although the semantic connection is tenuous, presumably a Dev. N. fr. I aç- cf. açın-; 'a gift' and more specifically 'a gift from a ruler'; Kaş.'s second meaning is not noted elsewhere. N.o.a.b. Uyğ. viii ff. Chr. yüklerin açılar ertün açuğın ötündiller (the Magi) 'opened their packages and presented their gifts (Hend.)' U I 6, 12-13 (mis-transcribed and mistranslated): Civ. Kaş. I 63: KB (the king speaks) menigdin açığ bolsu sêndin tapuğ 'let there be gifts from me and service from you' 596; êl(î)igme açığ birle açı kapuğ 'and the king opened the door with a gift' 616; o.o. 1035, 2399, 2495, 5218.

D açuk N./A.S. (Pass.) fr. I aç-; lit. 'open' with metaph. extensions, esp. (1) 'clear' (sky); (2) 'frank, friendly' (disposition); (3) 'obvious, manifest'; (4) in recent Osm. 'an open financial account, deficiency, bankruptcy'. S.i.a.m.l.g. usually as açık and the like. Uyğ. viii ff. Bud. açuk ađırtlığ 'clearly distinguishable' TT VI 383 (v.l.); açuk (gap) U III 35, 16: Xak. xi açuk 'anything open' (maftüh); hence açuk kapuğ 'an open door'; açuk kök 'a cloudless (müşhiya) sky'; and anything obvious (bayyin) is called açuk 1ş Kaş. I 64: KB açuk tuttu yüz 'he maintained a friendly attitude' 500; açuk 'friendly' 691, 2122; xiii(?) Tef. açuk 'obvious, clear' 65: xiv Muh. al-maftüh açuk (cim) Mel. 56, 4; 82, 16; Rif. 154, 188: Çığ. xv ff. açuk ('with -ç-') kuşâda 'open' San. 32v. 2 (quotn.): Xwar. xiv açuk 'open, clear' Qutb 3; Nahe. 2, 16; 23, 6 etc.: Kıp. xiv açuk (cim) al-maftüh İd. 8: xv maftüh açık Tuh. 48b. 7: Osm. xiv ff. açuğ/açuk 'open, clear', fr. xvi onwards açık TTS II 3, 5; III 2.

oçok/oçak (oçok) originally 'hearth, fireplace', and the like; hence esp. in SC, SW 'a building of which the hearth is the centre', and hence 'a group of persons assembling in such a building', that is 'family, guild, regiment of Janissaries', etc. S.i.a.m.l.g.; in some NE and NC languages oçok and the like; in the SW (Oğuz) languages oçak. The evidence points to oçok as the original form. Uyğ. viii ff. Bud. (in a list of parts of the house) oçok taş 'hearthstone' TT VI 86: Xak. xi oçak al-kânün 'fireplace' Kaş. I 64; köçürme: oçak (sic) a fireplace which is transported from place to place' I 490, 26: xiv Muh. al-micmara o:ca:ğ (cim) Mel. 68, 15; Rif. 169: Çığ. xv ff. oçağ/oçak (t) âtasdân-i maibax 'a kitchen fireplace' on which they put cooking-pots; hence metaph. düdmân wa xânadân-i buzurg a large family or clan'; (2) 'an iron ring' (lawğ) which they put on a prisoner or criminal San. 65r. 19 (quotn.); there is no other trace of the last meaning): Kom. xiv 'fireplace' oçak CCG; Gr.: Kıp. xiii al-kânün o:ca:k (misspelt voca:R) Hou. 6, 15: xv kânün oçak Tuh. 31a. 5; Kat. 64, 6: Osm. xv ff. oçak is recorded for 'fireplace' fr. xv and with metaph. meaning fr. xvii TTS I 534; III 530; IV 596.

VU ?D uçuk assuming, as seems reasonable, that it is not oçok, there is one early occurrence of this word, which might, in the context be taken as a Dev. N. fr. uç-. There is one certain survival of such a word, Kom. xiv uçux 'chaff' CCG; Gr., no doubt so called because it flies about. This meaning survives in NW Kaz., RI 1327. It is difficult, if not impossible, to connect uç- with Çığ. xv ff. uçuğ/uçuk ('with -ç-') (1) tabxâl 'fever spots';

(2) metaph., xâl 'a mole (or styc?) which grows in the eye' San. 65v. 18, or Osm. xiv ff. uçuk 'epilepsy' TTS I 712; II 917; III 696; IV 773 (and San. 65v. 20). The early passage might possibly (other alternatives have been suggested) be translated as follows: Türkü VIII (we lived in the Çoğay kuzi; and Kara: kum, eating gazelles and hares; the people's bellies were full) yağımız tegre: uçuk teg ertl: 'our enemies were all round us like a flock of birds' T 8.

VU açkı: 'elder brother, (junior) paternal uncle'; cf. éçl:. The Xak. entry follows oçak and might imply a basic form açık*, but the Kıp. forms point to açkı. N.o.a.b. Xak. the Xakāni (Turks), addressing an elder brother (al-axi'l-akbar) say açkı; the ç is inserted only with the 1st Pers. Poss. Suffix; it is not permissible to say açkıñ Kaş. I 64; Kıp. XIII al-'amm 'paternal uncle' açkı; (sic; also aça: karındaşı); İd. 31, 19: XIV açğı; (cim, unvocalized) al-şāğīr yuxātibū'l-kabīr 'a junior thus addresses a senior' İd. 9.

Duçğuk Hap. leg.?, possibly the earlier form of some medieval words mentioned under uçuk; prezumiš Dev. N. fr. uç-. Xak. xı uçğuk al-zuhām 'catarrh, cold in the head' Kaş. I 98.

C İçkur compound of İç 'inner' and I kur 'belt'. Survives in some NE, SE, NC, and SW languages as ıçır, ıçur, and the like. Xak. xı Kaş. I 35 (İç): xiv Muh. al-kamarrān 'belt' ıçur Mel. 67, 8; Xwar. XIII 'Ali İçkur 'belt' 47; Kom. xiv 'belt' ıçır CCG; Gr.: Kıp. xiv ıçkur al-kamarrān 'a Pe. word' İd. 9; *Osm. F a:jun the Sogdian word "ʕwn (ajün) 'life, living being', and the like, used as a Buddhist technical term to mean 'state of existence; one of a series of lives in the process of birth, death, re-incarnation'; was also used as a l.-w. with the same meaning in Turkish Bud. and Man. texts. On the adoption of Islam it came to be used as a translation of Ar. al-dunyā 'this world', as opposed to al-āxira 'the next world', when dunyā was not itself used as a l.-w. Survived in Çağ. until about xv and, although not traceable in Old Osm., has recently been adopted in Rep. Turkish as acun under the false belief that it was a real Turkish word suitable to take the place of dunyā. Uyg. VIII ff. D açın- Preliminary note. In the early period the Refl. f.'s of 1 aç- and açı- would have been homophonous, and it is difficult to decide which form the early occurrences represent, but on balance they all seem to represent the former. If so the earliest occurrence of the latter is in a side-note (prob. in a SW hand) to Kıp. XV ta'allama 'to feel pain' awurun- (for ağrın-) Tuh. 9b. 4 with açın- in the margin. On the other hand, at the present day the only survival of the Refl. f. of 1 aç- seems to be NE Sag., Şor adın- (sic) 'to open the mouth'; açın- (with a wide range of phonetic variations) 'to feel pain, grief, anger, or compassion; to grudge; to be pitied', etc., which s.i.a.m.l.g., is clearly the Refl. f. of açı:-.

u:d, etc. Preliminary note. *There are seven basic words in this group of which the original pronunciations can be firmly fixed as u:d, o:d, ot, ö:d, ö:d, öt, and ü:d, which are not easy to keep apart since in the early period -d was pronounced -t. There may also at one time have been a second u:d 'sleep', see I u:. In some medieval languages uvut has become utfud and uğut u:t.

u:d 'bovine, ox', without reference to sex, not 'bull', which was öküz or buka; nor 'cow', which was ingek; almost syn. w. sığır. It early became the word for 'ox' in the twelve-animal cycle, and lingered on in this meaning in the west long after it had become obsolete as a common noun. The entries in some Osm. dicts., Sami 208 (öt), Red. 242 (od), 249 (oz), 255 (ot) are muddled reminiscences of this. Survives as uy, a common noun, in some NE, SE, and NC languages. Sporadic spellings with -d are errors. See Doerfer II 584. Uyg. VIII ff. at- basically 'to throw, to shoot', with a very wide range of extended and metaph. meanings. (Red. for examples lists 22). There is a wide variation in the cases of the direct and indirect object; the original usage seems to have been to put the object thrown in the Acc., the target (if mentioned) in the Dat., and the weapon (if mentioned) in the Abl.; another usage is to put the target in the Acc., and the weapon in the Instr., and another to mention only the weapon in the Acc. In some phr., e.g. tağ at- 'of the dawn, to break' there is no stated Object; and in some languages at- has almost become an Aux. ét- (éd-) has a long semantic history; it originally meant 'to organize, put in order' (a meaning surviving only(?) in NE Tuv. Pal. 576), then 'to ornament, adorn' (cf. étlğ), then 'to create' (as part of an organized plan), then by a gradual process of attenuation simply 'to make', and finally 'to do'. This attenuation occurred chiefly in the Western languages; the Eastern languages, perhaps for the colourful reason given by Kaş., rather avoided the word and continued to use kıl- for 'to make, do.' S.i.a.m.l.g., nearly always for 'to make, do', but in most languages used chiefly to form compound verbs out of foreign, esp. Ar. nouns. The consonant of this verb, unlike that of at-, is -d- before vowels in the SW (Oğuz) languages and this no doubt represents the earliest form. The intervocalic -d- in the NE languages is not significant as it occurs universally. Türkü VIII the word is common (over a dozen occurrences) usually in the phr. bođun ét- 'to organize a people (group of clans or tribes) into a realm (é:l)', often with an implication of conquering them first; e.g. Suğdak bođun éteyın téyın 'saying "I will organize the Sogdian people"' (I crossed the Pearl River) IE 39; another phr.

is çerig ét- 'to marshal troops in battle order'; e.g. süygü bolsar çerig éter erti: 'when there was going to be a battle, he used to marshal the troops' Ix 9; the later meaning perhaps occurs in bark étgüci: beđiz yaratıgma bitig taş étgüci 'ornamenting the grave goods, having the painted decoration carried out, and ornamenting the memorial stone' I N 13; also occurs in the Hend. ét- yarat-; e.g. Az bođun étip yaratıp 'organizing the Az people' I E 19; the proper name or title éti étmis 'having organized a realm' first occurs in Ođın 4: viii ff. éti:ğ étmis men Irk B. 48; Man. biz adruk adruk étip yaratıp nomka kiğürsüg törö bar ertil 'there was a rule that we should organize (Hend.) various things and introduce them into the doctrine' Chuas. 228-9 (exact meaning obscure): Uyg. viii *çerig étdi Şu. VU üđ- Hap. leg.; previous editors have read öd-, taking the word as connected with 2 öf, and translated it 'to give advice', but this is etymologically impossible; it seems in fact to be the basic verb of üđig 'sexual passion', q.v.; but the text may be corrupt. Cf. üđlen-. Türkü VIII ff. kara: üpgük yıl yarımazkan ted: üđmeç körmek ürkittü 'the black hoopoe, before the year became bright, said, "Do not get excited (?), do not look, you frightened me"' IrkbB 21 (the double -tt- is unusual in Runic script, and the word may be an error for ürkittmeç).

1 öf- the basic connotation is movement through or over; it is both Trans. and Intrans., in the latter case almost always with 'time' of some sort as the Subject. If Trans. it can govern several cases, with different shades of meaning; with the Acc. it usually means 'to cross', e.g. a river, the movement being over rather than through; with the Dat. it means 'to penetrate into (something)'; and with the Abl. (and/or Loc.) 'to pass right through (something)' and come out the other side. There are various metaph. meanings, e.g. 'to pass over, forgive (sins, etc., Abl.)'; 'to give up, renounce (something)'; and, if Intrans., (of the bowels) 'to be purged'; (of goods) 'to move freely, be easily marketed'. E t:đu: a word read in Kaş. I 110, 10, and translated 'trouble, distress' by Brockelmann with a query and by Atalay without one. It occurs in a verse, Kaş.'s translation of which is too free to help, spoken by a man in a lovers' quarrel, aydı: senliğ u:đu: emgek tellim r:đu: (or İdğü), yumşar katığ u:đu: köplüm şapa: yügrük. The first u:đu: is the Gerund of ud- and the second is I u:đu: 'sand-dune'. The word after tellim might be the Gerund of ud- used in a slightly different meaning as a Postposition meaning 'after', or it might be the Gerund of ıd- although that verb has no obviously appropriate meaning. In any event it cannot be a noun. It must mean something like 'He said, [I went] following you, and after(?) many sufferings, the hard sand-bank softened, and my heart hastened to you.'

1 İdi: properly 'master, owner', but in Moslem texts often 'the Lord' (God). The phonetic history of this word is exceptionally complicated. The original form must have been ıdı; but the syn. word ıge/ıye/ı-e is so old that its independent existence cannot be completely excluded. It seems, however, more probable that this is merely a Sec. f. with an unusual vowel change in the final. The position is complicated by the existence of a syn. Mong. word ece(n) which is as old as the XIII SH (Haensich 42), and looks like a Turkish loan-word. İdi: could have become ıcı in Mong., but ıge/ıye could hardly have become ece, so if the two words are identical the word must have been borrowed before the vocalic change took place and later altered to conform with it. It survives in a wide range of Sec. f. words, which are not always easy to identify:—NE e: R I 657; I: 1407; İe 1411; Khak. e: Bas. 334; Tuv. e: Pal. 591; SE Tar. ege R I 694; Türkü İga Shaw; ege BS; ıge Jarring; NC Kir. e., *ege Kzx. Bud. altı kaçığlarınu altı atkaŋularını eziğin iğidin 'the deceitfulness and falseness of the six objects of sensual perception and the six attachments (to this world)' Suv. 371, 7 ff.; o.o. U II 10, 19, and 26 (mis-spelt and mistranslated); TT VI 189 (v.l.).

D atkaŋguluksuz Priv. N./A. fr. an A.N. of atkanğu. N.o.a.b. Uyğ. VIII ff. Bud. atkanğuluksuz yokuğ blidiler uktılar 'they knew and understood the nothingness (Sanskrit śūnyatā) which is free from attachment (to this world)' TT VI 462 (and see note thereon); a.o. Suv. 60, 8 (1 boğd).

D odğurati: Adverb in -tı; as this Suff. is attached only to N./A.s, the word is presumably der. fr. odğurak, q.v.; the connotation is that the intellect is aroused, so that the conscious action of the mind etc. is stimulated; the best translation is therefore 'rousingly, vividly'. Hitherto transcribed utğurati and translated 'completely', but neither form nor meaning are etymologically justified. N.o.a.b. Uyğ. VIII ff. Man. (damaged passage) odğurati belğü(lüğ) körğürü bérdi 'he demonstrated . . . so that it became vividly manifest' M III 26, 11 (i): Bud. (then applying his mind to the matter) odğurati ukar 'he vividly understands' U II 9, 12: odğurati belğülüğ TT VI 296; (my good sons, listen carefully) odğurati nomlayu béreyin 'I will preach rousingly to you' do. 383.

D adğıra:k Dim. f. of adğır; properly 'a young stallion'. Survives in NE Alt., Leb. ayğırak R I 16, 17; Bar. ayğırak do. 17; NC Kir. ayğırak do. 16, in this meaning. Kaş.'s meaning is otherwise unknown. Xak. xı adğıra:k al-a-şam mina'l-wi'ül, wa huwa bi-manzilati'l-kabş li'l-şiyäh 'the white-footed antelope'; it is in the same relation (to the doc) as the ram to the nannygoat Kaş. I 144.

D odğurak N./A.S. fr. odğır, sometimes used as an Adv., cf. odğurati, q.v.; the two words appear as alternative readings in the MSS. of TT VI. Basically the meaning must be 'rousing' or the like; applied both to human actions (preaching, etc.) and human sensations (perception, feeling, etc.), in the latter case perhaps best translated 'vividly, convincingly, or the like. Pec. to Uyğ. Hitherto transcribed utğurak, or more recently otğurak, and translated 'completely', but these seem to be errors. Uyğ. VIII ff. Man. (thus long and continuously you have wrought great benefits; by virtue of your good deeds) odğurak burxan [kutin bultupuz?] 'you have convincingly [attained the blessed status of?] Prophet' TT III 105; Bud. (then after reflection) odğurak tuydum 'I vividly perceived' U II 5, 16 and 4, etc. (tuy-); (my dear son hear) meniş odğurak sözlemiş savımın 'my rousing words' U III 82, 11-12; o.o. U I 34, 18; U III 80, 25; Tiğ. 50b: 6 (see note); TT VI 279 (see note for o.o.); Hüen-tš. 318; 2084: Civ. odğura:k (spelt otğura:k) çivşağun şor yağlağ kuruğ; a.şlar: 'startlingly acid, salt, oily, and dry foods' TT VIII 119.

D adğırılık A.N. (Conc. N.) fr. adğır. S.i.a.m.l.g., except? NW usually as ayğırılık meaning 'the behaviour of a stallion'. Türkü VIII ff. (the beg visited his horses; his white mare had just foaled) altu:n tuyuğluğ adğırılık yarağay 'the golden-hoofed stud will flourish' Irkb 5.

D atakımsın- Hap. leg.; occurs in a very late Uyğ. text in a prov. in which it is parallel to begımsın-, also Hap. leg.; morphologically Refl. f. of a Simulative Den. V. fr. a Dev. N.S.A. in -m; but the parallel form suggests that both words were felt to be Den. V.s in -msın-. If so, the word must be regarded as a Den. V. fr. atak a Dev. N. fr. ata:- meaning 'reputation' and the like, which s.i.a.m.l.g. but is first noted only in Çağ. xv ff. *adak Vel. 11; San. 33v. 1. Uyğ. VIII ff. V. fr. 2 ötüg; Kaş.'s etymology of ötün-, q.v., though implausible, confirms the connection; Ar. haka has the same double meaning 'to narrate' and 'to imitate'; the basic meaning in both cases may be 'to tell (a story) with illustrative gestures'. Survives in NE Şor, Sag. ökten-; Tel. öktön- R I 1182-3; Khak. öktin- 'to imitate'; SW Osm., Tkm. öykün- ditto. Xak. x1 o mapa: ötgündi: hakani fi amri wa hawani 'he imitated (Hend.) me in my affairs'; prov. karğa: ka:zka: ötgünse: buti: sinur 'if a crow imitates (haka) a goose (Kaş.), as usual, 'duck' its legs are broken' *Kaş. D edger- Trans. Den. V. fr. e:d; survives only (?) in NW Kar. I. etker- R I 844. Xak. x1 ol kiçig sözüg edgerdi: 'he heard the trivial (al-xasis) statement, exaggerated its importance and acted on it' (wa habbarahu wa 'amila bili); this V. is usually used in the negative form (maçhüdata(n)); one says ol anıy sözün edgermedi: mâ'htafala bikalâ-mihi wa mâ balâhu 'he did not think much of his statement and paid no attention to him'; and one says ol yavuz me:nli: edgerdi: 'he repaired (aşlaha) the damaged article' Kaş. I 227 (edgerür-, edgerme:k); edgermedip ok ata:r 'they discharge arrows paying no attention to the danger (lit. 'death') from them' (lä yubâli bi'l-mawf fihi) I 237, 27; edgermedip idâ lam yuħdar 'anhu wa turika mûmala(n)' 'if you do not beware of him (an enemy) and disregard him' II 29, 13.

D ötgür- Caus. f. of 1 öt-; 'to cause to pass through', with various metaph. meanings. S.i.s.m.l.g. (not SC, SW); cf. 2 ötür-. Uyg. VIII ff. Bud. ötgür- in Hüen-tz., note 2104, 2 (arğu:) means 'to let (water) pass into (a lake)'; otherwise it is used only of mental processes, and has been translated 'to get to the bottom (of a problem), understand it thoroughly', and 'to explain' (something to others); both meanings seem to occur; in TT VI 162-88 ötgürü usar occurs six times and must mean 'if he can thoroughly understand' (something Acc.); bilgeler alku muni bilmez ukmaz ötgürü umazlar 'wise men do not know or understand and cannot get to the bottom of all this' do. 211; but in do. 146-9 (if good men and women read and preach this scripture for the sake of all mankind) terip yürügün uktersar ötgürser (and understand the very deep doctrine of the root) the central phr. must mean 'and make them understand and penetrate its deep significance' in PP 74, 1 ff. (the prince interrogated certain wise men) kim yeme ötgürü umadılar 'who were, however, unable to explain'; and see ötgürü: Xak. x1 ötrüm karın ötgürdi: al-mušil aqlaqa'l-baın 'the purge loosened the bowels'; and one says of evke: bitig ötgürdi: 'he got a letter through (anfada) to his home'; also used of getting anything through something (anfada şay 'an şay') Kaş. I 226 (ötgürür-, ötgürme:k); Çağ. xv ff. ötger- ('with -k-', -di, etc.) geçür- 'to cause to pass through'; firâgat etdir- 'to cause to abandon'; açar etdir- 'to cause to make an impression' Vel. 88 (quotns.); (ötgüz- (-ip) geçür- do. 89 seems to be an error for ötgür- but might be a Sec. f.); ötger- (spelt) Caus. f., guđarânidân 'to cause to pass through' San. 59v. 21 (quotns.): Kip. xv nafşada 'to transmit, send through' ötger- Tuh. 55a, 7; (ötker- translating sa'ala 'to cough' in do. 20a. 9 and atasa 'to sneeze' in 26a. 5 is the different and later word referred to under ötgek).

VUD otul- (?mis-spelling of otal-) Hap. leg.; Pass. f. of 2 ota--. Xak. x1 tariğ otuldi: qutı'a şiryafu'l-zar, 'wa hutu kull nabi yu'tibuhu fa-yufsiduhu 'the weeds, that is any plant which they destroy and get rid of in the standing corn, were cut' Kaş. I 193 (otulur, otulma:k).

D ötel- (ödel-) Pass. f. of öte--. N.o.a.b. Xak. x1 ol bu: iştā: ötelidi: ta'annā fi hādā'l-amr wa mārāsa'l-şidda 'he worked hard at this matter and exerted his strength' Kaş. I 193 (ötölür, ötelme:k; an odd meaning, but must belong here): KB serinğın ötelşün mağa: söz takı 'let a statement be submitted from you to me and' (a statement from me to you) 2670; XIII(?) Tef. kaçan ödelse iğ 'when the task is ordained' 242; ötelmesde öpđin sağa anıy wahı 'before his (Gahriel's) inspiration is conveyed to you' 251 : Çağ. xv ff. ötel- Pass. f.; adā şudan 'to be paid' San. 61r. 24 (quotn.).

D ütül- Pass. f. of üt-; 'to be singed, scorched; (of grain) to be parched'. Survives in NC Kzcx. üyütl-, NW Kaz. ötel-, SW Osm., Tkm. ütül-. Xak. x1 ko: başı: ütüldi: 'the sheep's head (etc.) was singed' (uhriqa) Kaş. I 193 (ütülür, ütülmek:k); KB isizlik ot ot küyürgen bolur yolında keçiğ yok ütülgen bolur 'wickedness is a fire; fire constantly burns (people); there is no means of getting along the road, it is constantly being scorched' 249 (Arat reads ötülgen, but this word is not recorded and makes no sense).

D edle- Den. V. fr. eđ-; in the early period 'to turn (something Acc.) into something useful', hence, e.g. 'to cultivate (a garden, etc.)', and also 'to deem (something Acc.) to be useful', hence 'to esteem (someone)'. Later it came to mean simply 'to make, create', and finally, like ét-, it came to be little more than an Aux. V., used to form compound V.s w. N.s, usually foreign. In this sense it seems to have been regarded as more graceful than ét-. Survives as eyle- in SE Türki, Şaw 37, BŞ. 807, Jarring 40 (also in its earlier sense); NW Kaz.; SW Osm., Tkm. uyğ. VIII ff. Civ. (in a text about a vineyard, 'I will give a rent of 60 measures of wine') toğuz yıl edleşmeşke 'for cultivating it during the Swine Year' USp. 6, 5; edleşücl bir erklük kişi 'a responsible person to cultivate (the vineyard)' do. 21, 5; bağrı edleş 'cultivating the vineyards' do. 22, 41; bağlarımızı eylep (do. 22, 41, 47-8 (a XIV text): Xak. x1 ol edle:di: ne:pnı: şana'a'l-şay' arada(n) 'he made use of the thing' Kaş. I 286 (edle:r, edle:di); tavar üçün tepril: edleşmedip 'for the sake of money not respecting God' (ldı yubalı mina'llah) I 86, 2; edğü: savığ edleşe: 'if a man

D atlan- Refl. Den. V. fr. 2 at; it is not certain whether atla-, a verb which first appears in Xwar. XIII(?) Oğ. and occurs in other medieval and most modern languages, is connected with 2 at; it seems to mean 'to set out, march against' (in Oğ.) and more usually 'to stride' cf. Osm. adım 'a step, pace', and so prob. has some other origin. S.i.a.m.l.g., in NE usually altan-. Türkü VIII ff. Man. TT II 8, 63 (u:d-); Xak. XI er atlandı: 'the man rode (rakıba) Kaş. I 255 (atlanur, atlanma:k); ol atlandı: 'he rode a horse' I 285 (erroneously inserted between atla- and the illustrative verse, in which atlanur occurs); two o.o.: XIV Muh.(?) D ađruk Pers. N./A.S. fr. ađır-; cf. ađrik; basically 'divided, separated', hence usually 'different, other', and esp. 'different from, superior to (others)'; in comparisons the word compared with it is in the Acc. in Türkü VIII ff. Man., the Loc. (unless this is a misreading of the Abl.) in Uyğ. Bud. and the Abl. elsewhere. S.i.a.m.l.g. except SC; in NE ayrik, azrik, azirik; Khak. azirik; Tuv. ađrik; elsewhere ayrik. (D) otruğ 'island'; too old to be a Dev. N. fr. 2 otur- 'to sit', as has been suggested, since this form did not evolve fr. otur- until the medieval period; possibly a Den. V. fr. I otur-, with the connotation of something cut off from the mainland. Survives in various forms in one or two NE languages and NW Kaz. utraw. A Dim. f.(?) otraç was current in Kom. and Kıp. (Jd., Bul., Tuh.), and survives in NW Kar. T., Kov. 442. Most SC, NW, and SW languages use some form of atağ/adağ first noted in Muh. and also noted in Kom. and Kıp. (Jd., Bul., Tuh.), which it is difficult to connect morphologically with this word. Uyğ. VIII ff. Bud. oturuğ 'island' PP 33, 7; 36, 6; TT V 26, 91, and 94; Suv. 211, 19 and 22 (spelt oturuğ); Hüen-tš. 1915; Kuan. 20-1 (ergü); Xak. etrek Hap. leg. Oğuz XI etrek al-aşqar mina'l-ricâl '(of a man) red-haired' Kaş. I 101.

?D idriğ Hap. leg.; possibly an earlier form of 2 iriğ; morphologically a Dev. N. in -ğ, but there is no trace of iđır-. Argv. XI idriğ al-şay'u'l-xaşin 'anything hard'; originally iriğ Kaş. I 102.

D üdreğ Hap. leg.; Dev. N./A. fr. üdre:-. Xak. xi üdreğ neñ kull şay' rä'i, wa huca'l-zä'id ba'da'l-ğilla 'anything thriving, that is which increases after being scarce' Kaş. I 103.

D ötrük originally 'crafty, wily'; later 'untruthful, a lie'; presumably Dev. N./A. fr. 2 ötür- but hard to connect semantically. Survives only(?) in NC Kır., Kzx. ötrük/ötürük. Cf. igld, eziük, yalğa:n. Oğuz xi ötrük al-muhtäl 'crafty, wily' *Kaş. D ötrüm N.S.A. fr. 2 ötür-; 'purgative medicine, purge'. N.o.a.b. Cf. ötürük. Xak. xi ötrüm al-dawä'u'l-mushil 'a purgative medicine'; and al-şubrum 'spurge, Euphorbia', (a plant with milky sap) is called süt ötrüm; and this is close to the Ar. Kaş. I 107 (meaning of last clause obscure); KB (another said) ötrüm içürgü kerek 'we must give him a purge to drink' 1059.

PU otran Hap. leg.; a dubious word entered, out of alphabetical order, between ürkün and ıçgın. xi otran al-saräwil 'trousers'. I heard this in Yağma: Kaş. I 108.

D adırs Dev. N. fr. adır-; 'parting, parting place'. Survives as ayırs/ayırsı only(?) in SE Türki BŞ 12 and NC Kır. Xak. xi adırs rä's kull fariğayn 'the starting point of any two roads' Kaş. I 96.

D üdrüş Hap. leg., Dev. N. fr. üdür-. Xak. xi üdrüş al-muxäyara bayna'l-ayä 'a choice between things' Kaş. I 96.

Dis. V. ADR-

D adır- Caus. f. of I ad-; basically 'to separate (two things Acc., or something Acc., from something else Abl.'); hence 'to distinguish (between things Acc.)' and even 'to single out, prefer (something)'; cf. üdür-, q.v. Became a l.-w. in Mong. as ajira- 'to part from (people), return home' (Haensch 4) with further developments of meaning (Kow. 124, Haltod 26). S.i.a.m.l.g., usually as ayir-, but NE Khak. azir-; Tuv. adir-; in NC Kır., Kzx. acira- 'to part from (people)', re-borrowed fr. Mong. also occurs. In some texts it is difficult to distinguish between the Perf., etc. of adır- and adırt-, q.v. Türkük VIII ff. Yen. altı: yaşımta: kaş adırdım bilin-medim üç eçime: ayita: adırdım (the last word is prob. an error for adırdım) 'at the age of six I was parted from my father and did not get to know him; I said farewell(?) and was parted from my three elder brothers' Mal. 32. 16; Man. (in order to release the five gods and) yarukuğ karağ adırğalı 'to separate the light and darkness' *Çhuas. 9-10: Uyğ. (I 355) when it rhymes with ır-; ır- occurs in all periods down to XIX, I 355; II 503; III 345; IV 397, and survives in XX Anat. SDD 774, but is hardly mentioned in XIX dicts.

D attur- Caus. f. of at-; with a range of meanings similar to those of at-. S.i.m.m.l.g. Xak. x1 ol ok atturdı: 'he ordered (someone) to shoot (bi-ramy) an arrow, and he shot it'; also when he tells him to throw away (afrahañu) something, and he throws it away Kaş. I 217 (atturur, atturma:k): XIII(?) Tef. atdur- 'to order to throw' 63: Çağ. xv ff. attur- Caus. f. andâzândan 'to order to throw, or shoot' San. 28r. 18.

êder- 'to pursue', primarily in the sense of chasing game or pursuing an enemy; hence more vaguely 'to follow'. Survives only(?) in NE Tuv. eder-; NW Kaz., Nog. ıyer-; there is a NE Khak. Caus. f. ızer-. Türkü VIII ff. Man. muygak sığunuğ uvu[tsuz bl]lig üçün êderür ermiş 'the maral doe was pursuing the maral stag for sexual reasons' M I 35, 5-7: Uyg. VIII ff. Bud. [gap] eyin êderip 'following his wishes' U II 40, 10; a.o. Suv. 16, 7: Xak. x1 men anı: êderdim iqtafay-tuhu wa'ttaba'tu itrahu 'I followed him and followed his tracks' Kaş. I 178 (êderur, êderme:k; vocalization chaotic, fatha apparently changed to or from damma and also kasra on the alif); bu it ol keyikni: êderge:n 'this dog habitually chases (ilâb) wild game'; also used of a man who habitually demands his rights (yatlub haqqahu) I 157; êdergeli: idâ xaracta li-taşid 'if you go to hunt' I 447, 6; o.o. III 11, 4; III 228, 12 (êderdim talabtu); KB (this world is like a shadow) êderse kaçar 'if you chase it, it flees' 1409; (if your enemy flees, be satisfied) êderme uđu 'do not chase after him' 2395; o.o. 3536, 3970, 4301: XIII(?) At. billiglig billigni êdergen bolur 'the wise man constantly pursues wisdom' 105; Tef. êder-êzer- ditto 122: Xwar. xiv eyer- 'to hunt' Qutb 58: Kıp. xv taba'a 'to follow' eyer- Tuh. 10a. 8.

D êttür- Caus. f. of êt-; with a range of meanings similar to those of êt-. S.i.a.m.l.g. In Kaş. included in a section for verbs with short initial vowels, which perhaps indicates that the initial alif maksûr yâ was intended to represent ê-. Cf. êtl-. Uyg. VIII ff. Bud. êtdürdimiz 'if we have had constructed'; v.l. for êtdimiz in TT IV 6, 46 (êt-): Xak. x1 ol meniñ 1:şım êttürdi: 'he gave orders for putting my affair in order' (bi-ıñlâh amri); and one says ol etlûk êttürdi: 'he gave orders for the repair (bi-ıñlâh) of his boot' Kaş. I 217 (êttürür, êttürme:k): XIII Tef. aş êtdürdi 'he had food prepared' 86: Çağ. xv ff. êttür- Caus. f.; ba-digari kunânidan 'to make someone else make, or do (something)' San. 94r. 22.

VU(D) ittür- Hap. leg.; between ötür- and açur- in a section for verbs with long initial vowels; prima facie a Caus. f. in -tür-, but there is no verb it- with an appropriate meaning; 'to twist, spin' is normally egir-, q.v., which cannot be connected with this word. Xak. x1 ol apar blîk ittürdi: aftalahu'l-fatîla 'he made him twist (or spin) the wick'; also used for anything that is twisted (or spun?) Kaş. I 267 (ittürür, ittürme:k).

S otar- See otğar-.

VU I otur- Hap. leg., but see otrul-, otruş-. Certainly with back vowels and, if otruğ, q.v., is etymologically connected, with o-. Xak. x1 ol saç oturdi: qaşş'a'l-ş'a'r wa'l-fawb wa nahwahu 'he cut hair', (cut out) clothes and the like Kaş. I 176 (oturur, oturma:k, sic in MS.).

S 2 otur- See olur-.

utur- (?utir-) 'to meet'; survives only in the Ger. utru; q.v.; the basis of utrun-, utruş-. Became an early l.-w. in Mong. as uçra- 'to meet' (Haenisch 157) a form presupposing a Turkish utur-. This Mong. verb was subsequently borrowed as uçra- San. 64v. 11 and s.i.m.m.l.g. as uçra-, uçura-.

üđür- 'to choose (one of several Acc.); to part, separate, scatter (things, etc. Acc.); to separate (something Acc., fr. something Abl.)', with or without öpl, see v. G. ATG para. 279. Practically syn. w. ađır- (Kaş. uses the same range of words to translate both) and perhaps an 'attenuated' form of it. Survives only(?) in NE Khak. üzür-, same meaning, which fixes the first vowel as ü-, not ö- as normally used to transcribe this verb and its der. f.s. Cf. also şeç-. Uyg. VIII ff. Man. bêş ajuntaku tınlıglarığ billigsiz bil[igtin] öpl üđürtüpüz 'you separated the mortals in the five states of existence from ignorance' TT III 31-2: Xak. x1 ol üđürdi: (so read) ne:gni: ixtâra'l-şay' 'he choose the thing' Kaş. I 177 (üđürür, üđürme:k; follows the entry of ađır- and erroneously vocalized edir- in all 3 places); bu: er ol tegme: ne:gni: üđürge:n 'this man is constantly making a choice between things' (yuxayır bayna'l-aşyâ) I 157; (Budraç returned and) alpa:ğutin üđürdi: ixtâra abtâlahu 'choose his (best) warriors' I 144, 8; alp erenni: üđürdüm 'I scattered (farraqtu) (the enemies') warriors' (and twisted their necks) I 370, 21; (treat your comrade well and) adım üdürme: 'do not choose (lâ taxtâr) another' III 11, 3; böğünü: üdürdüm 'I choose (ixtârta) a wise (teacher)' III 228, 13 (cf. adür-: KB bu iki bedüür üdürmüş kuluğ 'these two things make a chosen servant great' 152; kayusun tilese üdürgil birin 'choose one of them whichever you wish' 244; o.o. 148, 327, 329 (adür-), 2342 (tuğça:k), 3534: XIII(?) Tef. üdür- 'to choose; to prefer' 242 (ödür-), 321 (udür-): Xwar. xiv üdür- 'to choose' Qutb 121 (ödür-), 195 (udür-), 202 (üdür-); aragızda bir kaçını üdürüp 'pick out one or two of yourselves' Nahc. 365, 13; a.o. 282, 11: Tkm. XIII (after a list of Kıp. meanings) ür- (vocalized eur-) intaxaba'l-şay' minal-ayâ 'to pick one thing out of several' Hou. 36, 1: Osm. xiv (PU) ür- 'to choose, pick out', 3 quotns. fr. one text TTS I 747.

D ötür-, etc. Preliminary note. There are three early verbs of this form, and in some modern languages verbs of similar form which are Sec. f.s of other verbs like öltür-; it is not always easy to identify the original forms of some of these verbs.

D 1 ötür- Hap. leg. ?; Caus. f. of ö-: Xak. xi ol mağa: sö:z ötürdi: dakara lî'l-kalâm 'he reminded me of the statement (etc.)' Kaş. I 267 (ö:türür, ö:türme:k).

D 2 ötür- Caus. f. of I öt-; with a range of meanings similar to those of I öt-; cf. ötgür- which is more or less synonymous. Survives in NE Kaç., Koib., Sag. as üttür- R I 1868; Khak. öttür-; in NW Kaz. as öttür-; in SW Tkm. and in xx Anat. as öttür- SDD 1121 and perhaps üttür- 1439. Xak. xi ol tam: ötürdi: 'he pierced (taqaba) the wall' Kaş. I 176 (ötürür, ötürme:k): Çağ. xv ff. ötür- (spelt) Caus. f.; ğudârândan 'to cause to pass through'; abbreviation of öğter- San. 59v. 14 (quotn.; pointing out that Vel. 79 gave the same quotn. with the mis-spelling ötüz-): Kıp. xiv ötür- taqaba Id. 8: xv nařada 'to transmit, send through' öttür- Tuh. 54b. 11: Osm. xiv gögsün ötürdi 'he sighed deeply, i.e. forced (the breath) through his chest' TTS I 570.

D 3 ötür-/öttür- Caus. f. of 2 öt-. Survives only(?) in SW Osm. öttür-, similar meaning. Xak. xi ol sıbızğu: (misvocalized) ötürdi: şayyaha bî'l-miznâr 'he played the flute' Kaş. I 176 (öttürür, öttürme:k); sıbızğu: öttürdi:, same translation; also used of anything from which a sound comes as the result of your action (hadâta minhu'l-şiyâh bi-fi'lik) I 217 (öttürür, öttürme:k).

üdre- 'to increase, multiply, flourish', and the like. Survives only(?) in SW Osm. üre-, same meaning. Xak. xi üdre:di: ne:ğ kařura ray'u'l-şay' 'the yield of the thing increased' Kaş. I 273 (üdre:re, üdre:me:k): KB (at table—stretch out your right hand and pronounce the name of God) yégü üdregey 'your food supplies will increase' 4597.

D adart- Caus. f. of adar-*, Intrans. Den. V. f. ada:. N.o.a.b. Türkü VIII ff. (if you wear a clear blue stone) yat kiři: adartu: (sic) uma:z 'a stranger cannot endanger you' Toy. 23-4 (EY I 58); similar phr. do. 29 (ağuluğ): Uyg. VIII ff. Bud. Sw. 73-4 describes the ten stages through which virtuous beings pass on their way to perfection, in each of which they remove obstacles and dangers which 'endanger' certain things (Dat.) e.g. belgüg öçürmekke adartdaçı tıdğ adalarıg 'the obstacles and dangers which endanger the suppression of visible signs'.

D adirt- Caus. f. of adür- and practically syn. w. it. In some forms difficult to distinguish fr. adür-; both the early occurrences might belong to adür-. Survives, with the same phonetic changes in most of the same languages as adür-. Türkü VIII ff. Yen. Mal. 28, 5 (inilgü:): Uyg. VIII ff. Bud. bilge bilgüdin adrutacı (?read ad(t)rtacı) 'distinguished by wisdom' TT V 24, 67 and 75: (Xak.) xiv Muh. in Mel. 38, 6; Rif. 125 ayırtmak is used to translate a word spelt al-infâd 'to (cause to) pierce through, transmit' (cf. 2 ötür-) in Mel. and al-itigâd 'to burn' in Rif.; neither meaning seems appropriate and some words may have fallen out between the Ar. and Turkish entry. Anřada does not occur in Muh., itigađa is (correctly) translated yahna- (cf. adrl-).

D adaş/adaş N. of Assn. fr. 1 a:t (a:d). Abdülkadir Inan in Türk Dili, Belleten 3rd Series, No 1, pp. 41 ff. argued that the original meaning was 'friend, comrade', and that 'namesake' was a later, secondary meaning. This is etymologically impossible, but the meaning 'comrade' is so prevalent in the early period as to suggest that in this context 1 a:t meant 'clan (rather than personal) name', so that adaş meant primarily 'fellow clansman'; cf. kadaş. S.i.a.m.l.g. See Doerfler II 437. Türkü VIII ff. Man. yavlak eş tuş adaş kadaş 'evil comrades (Hend.) and kinsmen (Hend.)' Chuas. 197-8; Uyg. VIII ff. Bud. Sanskrit sahāyatā 'comradeship' ēş adaş bolmak TT VIII B.4; ēş adaş 'comrades' is the term used for the hare, the monkey, and the beaver in the Hare Jātaka, U IV 44 ff., 'kinsman' would not here be strictly appropriate; on p. 46 adaş occurs twice, 52 and 66, once in adaş eş 62, once in ēş adaş 69; and twice in adaş böşük (q.v.) 55 and 64, while ēş appears once by itself, 48 and once in ēş tuş 59; in all cases except adaş böşük the obvious meaning is 'comrade' or the like: O. 1 a:k 'white' originally as the colour of an animal's coat as opposed to the more general word ürüg, q.v., later 'white' in all senses.

C.i.a.p.a.l. It occurs, often with a metaph. meaning in numerous phr. of which, e.g., San., TTS, and R give long lists. See Doerfer II 504. Türkü viii ak ađđır 'a white stallion' I E 35, 36; ak at 'a white horse' I E 40; ak 'white horse' I N 2, 3, 5, 6, 9: viii ff. ak bési: 'this white mare' Irkb 5; ak at do. 19: Uyğ. viii ff. Civ. ak kışığ az 'your white winters are rare' TT I 159 (the only such occurrence noted in Uyğ., while ürüg is common). Xak., Oğuz xi a:k in Oğuz al-abyad min kull şay 'white' of anything; and among the Turks it is used in relation to the colour of a horse (fi şiyâti'l-xayl), and one says a:k at al-farasu'l-aşab 'a white horse' (and two place-names A:k Sazy, A:k Tere:k) *Kaş. F 2 ak 'hateful'. Hap. leg.; Pelliot considered this to be an idiomatic use of 1 a:k, pointing out that Chinese pai 'white' (Giles 8,556) has a similar meaning in some contexts; but it seems more reasonable to suppose that it is a l.-w. fr. Chinese wu (Ancient Chinese 'ah) 'to hate, hateful' (Giles 12,779). Cf. akla:-. Uyğ. viii ff. Bud. ayığ kılınçlığ ak oğlın 'his wicked hateful son' PP 62, 5.

iğ 'weeping, sobbing', the base of iğla:-, q.v.; not noted in the early period, but survives in NE Şor 1 R I 1351; Khak. 11; Tuv. 1: (only with Poss. Suff. 1:51); NC Kır. 1y.

uğ 'a tent rib, wooden strut forming part of the framework of a tent of the yurt type'; sometimes confused with 1 ok, see Çağ. below. Survives in NC Kzx. u:k, same meaning, R I 1606 (not in MM), and possibly NE Şor uğ 'yurt' R I 1617 and SW Osm. huğ 'a hut made of reeds or rushes' TTS I 346; Red. 2174. 1 ok 'arrow'. Owing to the use of arrows for various ritual and ceremonial purposes it came to be used at a very early date in the sense of 'sub-tribe' (and as such forms part of such tribal names as On ok) and also of 'a lot' in casting lots. Ok (so spelt) 'a share of an inheritance', noted in Kaş. is, no doubt, another special sense of this word. Later it came, like kik, to mean 'a long piece of wood', usually round in section, like an axle, rolling-pin, and the like, and so tended to be confused with uğ. S.i.a.m.l.g. See Doerfer II 605-6. Türkü VIII okun urtu: 'he hit with an arrow' I E 33, 36; On ok the tribal name of the Western Türkü occurs several times in I, II, T: Uyğ. VIII ff. Man.-A ok ya altı 'took bows and arrows' *Man.-uig. 2 ok/ök enclitic particle, the vowel quality of which conforms to that of the word to which it is attached, and to which it adds emphasis. Mon. V. AĞ-

a:ğ- Preliminary note. A:ğ- 'to rise (from somewhere Abl.): to climb (something Dat.)' is common in the early period but seems to survive only in some meanings of NC Kır. o.-: SW Osm. ağ- 'to rise, evaporate', etc. and Thm. ağ- (inter alia) 'to climb (over)'; to overflow; to exceed (a stated period). Kaş. gives ağ- in the same para., a meaning which cannot be connected with 'to rise', is, as such, unrecorded elsewhere, and is entered here as 2 ağ-. In modern times there is a verb ağ- meaning (e.g. of a horse's load, or a pair of scales) 'to lean over to one side' and the like, which, though not recorded earlier, is very common in modern times appearing as SE Türki ağ- Shaw II BŞ 7, Jarring 14; NC Kır. o.- (some meanings) *Yud. 593; Kzx. aw-R I 67, MM 50; SC Uz 2. oğ-, NW Kaz. aw-R I 67; SW Osm. It is difficult to connect this modern word with 'to rise', but it might have arisen from Kaş.'s second meaning. See ak-Osm. XIV and ağınçsız, which is also connected with this modern meaning.

ağı: from XI onwards consistently translated 'silk brocade' and the like; earlier contexts suggest the meaning 'treasure', and cf. ağıç:, ağılık; 'silk brocade', as the main component of early Turkish treasures, may, however, have been the original meaning. N.o.a.b. The word ağ/ağı prob. used only in such phr. as ağı kurdu 'caterpillar' noted in Osm. xvi TTS II 9 and surviving in xx Anat. SDD 74, 76, 78, 131, 1602 prob. has nothing to do with 'silk' (worm); it seems to be a Sec. f. of ağu:. Cf. barçın. Türkü VIII ağı: occurs 5 times in IS 5-7, II N 4-5, and several times elsewhere in the context of gifts given by the Chinese to the Turks; in IS 5, II N 4 it summarizes a list of such gifts 'gold, silver', and two words prob. meaning silken fabrics of some kind, so prob. means 'treasure'; in a list of booty in T 48 sarığ altun: ürüñ kümüş kız kođuz egrı: teve: ağı: 'yellow gold, white silver, girls, femmes soles, humped camels'... it looks more like 'brocade'; in other occurrences it could be either, but 'treasure' is more probable: VIII ff. Man. [gap katı] ğlanmaz inçip ağı bulur; yeme [ne tğrılığ ağı barım elğnerü kelser esirgenü kışganu tutmaz kizlemez 'he makes no efforts but still acquires treasures; and whatever treasures and property come into his hands he does not retain and hide them in miserliness and greed' M III 21, 1-4 (i) (here, esp. in the Hend., 'treasure' must be the meaning): Uyg. VIII ff. Man. ağı baram M I 15, 4-5; III 11, 20; 13, 6-7 (i): Bud. ağı barım U II 76, 2; PP 7, 6 and 9; 9, 2; TT VI 101, 233, 266; Tiş. 19a. 4: Civ. ağı barım TT VII 34, 3: Xak. xi ağı: al-dibac 'silk brocade' *Kaş. ığaç (ığaç-) originally 'tree', in Uyğ. esp. in the phr. 1: ığaç 'shrubs and trees'; hence 'wood (generally), a piece of wood'. At least fr. XI onwards the word was also used for a large unit of linear measurement, conventionally a parasang of 4 or 5 miles, perhaps originally a time-distance measure like 'an hour's journey'; it is hard to see any semantic connection between the two meanings. The phonetic history, too, like that of ığla:-, q.v., is complicated. Before XI the form was consistently ığaç but in Xak. became yığaç with a prosthetic y-, which survives only in SC Uzb. yogoç 'wood' (for 'tree' Persian daraxt is used) and Çuv., yavdşyivdç (yavâş, yivâsy) Ash. uğut 'yeast'. Survives in NE Şor R I 1619; SE Türki Shaw 24; NC Kır.; and, with a slightly different meaning, in SW xx Anat. uğut, uhut, uğunt SDD 1415. Xak. xi uğut a word for 'yeast' (xamir) used in making beer (al-mizz). It is various vegetable drugs (adwiya) which are collected and mixed with (specially) grown barley; the whole is then kneaded, cut into pieces the size of a nut and dried. Then wheat and barley are boiled, and the yeast is broken up, and an amount the size of a nut is sprinkled on each (lot of) wheat. The boiled wheat is then folded over and put on a clean thing (şay) to ferment for three days. Then it is picked up and put in a jar and left to ferment in it for (another) ten days. Then water is put on it and later strained. This is 'wheat wine' (şarâbi'l-hinta) Kaş. I 50.

ağtar-/axtar- apparently both Intrans. 'to turn, or roll, over' (rare) and Trans. 'to turn, or roll, (something Acc.) over', with some extended meanings like 'to translate (a book etc. Acc.) from (one language Abi.) into (another -ça/-çe)'; more or less syn. with evlr-, esp. in the last meaning. The second syllable, always -tar-, excludes the possibility that this is a Caus. f. Also partly syn. with ağna-, but unlikely to be connected with it etymologically. As regards the velar, Kaş. is prob. right in saying that ağtar- was the original form, though he habitually uses axtar-, see his remarks on sıgıt; the Uyg.

script is too ambiguous to make the Uyğ. form certain. S.i.a.m.l.g., sometimes much distorted, e.g. NE ağdar-jañar-jañar; NC, NW awdar- as well as more regular forms, aktar-/axtar- in the same groups. Uyğ. viii ff. Dis. AĖL ağıl originally 'an enclosure for livestock; cattle-pen, sheep-fold'; thence 'a settlement or group of tents' associated with such an enclosure. An early, 1st Period, l.-w. in Mong. as ayıl (Haenisch 11, Kow. 3), and in Russian (fr. a NW language) as aul. Survives as ağıl in SE Türki, Şaw 11; SC Uzb. (oğıl) and SW Az. Osm., Tkm. (a:ğıl) and as awl in some NC and NW languages. The form ayıl in some NE and NC languages is a re-borrowing fr. Mong. See Doerfer II 503. oğıl 'offspring, child', originally of either sex, but with a strong implication of 'male child'; by itself it can mean 'son', but not 'daughter'; in the Plur. it might mean 'sons and daughters', but oğıl kız would be the more normal expression. One of the very few Turkish words forming a Plur. in -n. Thus oğlan was originally the Plur. and understood as such, but this fact was later forgotten and oğıl came to mean 'son', and oğlan 'boy' and later 'servant' or 'bodyguard' (the origin of German Uhlan); the timing of these changes has not yet been worked out. Both words s.i.a.m.l. with various phonetic changes. See Doerfer II 498, 502. Türkü VIII various suffixed forms oğlum, oğlu; etc. are common in I, II, T, etc.; oğlanım, clearly Plur., I S 1, I N 1; I N 11; oğlanımızda: Plur. I SE; a.o. I E 5, II E 5 (atic); VIII ff. oğlu: Irkb 15, etc.; (a gambler staked) oğlanın kisi:si:n 'his sons (or children) and his wife' do. 29; oğlanım inça: bili:ğler 'my sons, know this' do. D ığla- Den. V. fr. ığ; 'to weep'. The phonetic history of this verb is very similar to that of ığaç, q.v.; the original form was certainly ığla-, but a form with prosthetic y- evolved in Uyğ. and was an alternative form in Xak. S.i.a.m.l.g. usually as ığla-, yığla- or a Sec. or metathesized form of one of them, but in NE there are some forms with initial a- or rounded vowels and the SW form ağla- (Tkm. a:ğla-) probably emerged as early as XIV. I ağan Hap. leg.; the para. concerned is most obscure; Thomsen translated the word 'penance' as a pure guess, suggesting a connection with ağan- in U II 87, 62; this is a simple misreading of ağna-, which could be a Den. V. fr. this word; if so, it might mean 'prostration' or the like; Orkun's translation 'seclusion', based on a supposed connection with I ağla- is morphologically improbable. Türkü VIII ff. ak at karşis:n üç bolu:ğta: talu:la:pan ağanka: ötü:ğke idmîs: 'a white horse choosing his adversary in the three states of existence(?) sent him to prostration(?) and prayer(?)' Irkb 19.

D ağınçsız pec. to Uyğ. As pointed out in U I, p. 55 this word is used to translate the Chinese phr. pu t'ui (Giles 9,456 12,183) which translates Sanskrit avinivartaniya 'indomitable, unshakable'. It seems therefore to be a Priv. N/A. fr. ağınç Dev. N. fr. the Refl. f. of 2 ağ- in its medieval meaning (see ağ- Preliminary note). It could be transcribed as akınçsız and taken as more or less syn. with akığsız, but this is less probable. Uyğ. VIII ff. Man. ağınçsız köpül 'an unshakable mind' TT III 18; Bud. Suv. 488, 13; Pfahl. 6, 4 (evrilingçsiz).

?F İğar n.o.a.b. v. G. ATG, p. 309 suggests that this is Sogdian yyr and prob. means 'strong'. Türkü VIII İğar élligde: İğar xağanıgda: yeg kultım 'I made them better than those who had a strong(?) realm and a strong(?) xağan' I E 29, II E 24; İğar oğlanıgızda: 'among your strong(?) sons' I SE.

VU?F oğar pec. to Kaş. In spite of the difference in vocalization it seems likely that this is an Ar. l.-w., perhaps received through Pe. where it is also a l.-w. Xak. XI oğar at al-farasu'l-ağarr 'a horse with a white blaze on its forehead'; this word agrees with the Ar. in sound and meaning except that in Ar. the alif carries a fatha and in Turkish a ğamma Kaş. I 53; a.o. I 335 (bol).

VU oğur Hap. leg. Although this is described as Oğuz, the A.N. oğurluk, q.v., appears in a Xak. verse. It is entered between the Xak. and Oğuz translations of uğur and is possibly a special meaning of that word, but there is no obvious semantic connection. Oğuz XI oğur al-iwād 'exchange', one says atka: oğur aldım 'I received (something) in exchange for the horse' Kaş. I 53.

uğur semantically rather indefinite; seems to connote both 'time' and 'cause'; in some contexts it is hard to say which is uppermost. 'Time' seems to have evolved into 'the right time, an auspicious time', and thence into 'good fortune' the meaning uppermost today in the word and its der. f.s. Very common in the early period, but survives only(?) in SW Az., Osm., Tkm. (and Krim R I 1010). Has been fairly consistently transcribed oğur, but TT VIII has uğur and this is the modern pronunciation. See Doerfer II 604. Uyğ. VIII ff. Chr. ol uğurka 'for that reason' (the Magi still worship fire) U I 9, 3: Man.-A (after a list of names) él(I)entük erksintük uğurinta 'at the time when (the persons named) were ruling and exercising authority' M I 27, 10: Man. az nızwani uğurinta 'because of the passion of lust' TT II 16, 20: Bud. Kir. ix ff. éllim uğurta 'for the sake of(?) my realm' Mal. 10, 8 (a chaotic inscription, but these words seem clear): Xak. XI uğur al-waqt 'time'; one says ne: uğurda: keldi:ğ 'at what time did you come?'; uğur al-dawla (here) 'reign'; hence one says beg uğurında: meniğ i:şım étildi: salaha amri fi dawlati'l-amir 'my affairs were kept in good order in the reign of the beg'; uğur al-imkân wa'l-furşa fil'-şay 'possibility, opportunity for something'; hence one says bu: i:ş uğurluğ boldı: şara hädä'l-amr fi imkânihı wa furşatihı 'this affair became possible and opportune' Kaş. I 53 (paras. on oğur and uğur in Oğuz follow); and about 20 o.o. meaning 'time, occasion, the right time' (waqt or zamân): KB (a prudent man) iş uğrin bilür 'knows the right time to work' 2192: XIII(?) Tef. ol uğurda 'at that time; at that very moment' 232 (oğur): Çağ. xv ff. uğur (1) samt wa maqşadı ki ba-ân şaraf tawaccuh wa rü kunand 'a direction towards which one turns and goes'; (2) barakat wa sa'adat 'blessedness and happiness' San. 76v. 27: Oğuz XI uğur al-xayr wa'l-baraka 'good fortune, blessedness'; hence one says to a traveller yo:l uğur bolsun 'may your journey be fortunate and blessed'; this word is used only in regard to a journey (fi hâli'l-safar) Kaş. I 53: Osm. xiv ff. uğur 'direction; objective; journey' noted in several texts TTS I 716-17; II 921; III 722; IV 778, but in some quotations this is not the meaning, e.g. (I) kadirğa tamâm bir yıl uğura gitti, denizden mâ'adä nesne görmediler 'the galley went out for a period of a whole year, but they saw nothing except the sea'.

akru: 'gently, quietly', and the like; often doubled. From the earliest period a longer form akuru: occurs and fr. XI forms with -n attached. None of the morphological analyses of this word which have been suggested, e.g. in Brockelmann, para. 104, are plausible, and it seems to be a basic word, the form with attached -n being perhaps an Instr. S.i.s.m.l.g. usually with attached -n and sometimes metaphorized as in SW. Uyğ. VIII ff. Bud. akuru akuru mapın yoriyur 'she walks at a quiet pace' U II 24, 2; a.o. U III 72, 17: Civ. ot akuru akuru [gap] 'let the fire [burn] gently'. H II 18, 56: Xak. uğra:- Den. V. fr. uğur, and like it semantically rather indefinite. In Uyğ. it is nearly always constructed with a Ger. in -ğalı:/ğell-, and means 'to intend to (do something)', occasionally with the Dat. with the same meaning; the Ger. uğrayu how-ever seems to mean 'especially, particularly'

(see discussion and further examples in TT V, p. 33, note B86). In Xak. it usually takes the Dat. and means 'to go purposefully (to someone or to do something)'. In Rbğ., as well as the earlier usages, the meaning 'to meet (someone Dat.)' first appears; this is the normal modern meaning. Survives in SE Türki Shaw 11; NE Kar. D aġırçak 'spindle whorl'; later used for other objects of similar shape like 'millstone', 'the knob on the top of a tent', and the like. In spite of the great variety of spellings, there can be little doubt that this is a Conc. N. fr. aġır; although the alternation ç/ş is well established for the Suff. -cın/-şın it is otherwise unknown for -çak; this is more prob. than the alternative possibility that it is a Dim. f., although that form is rather more common. S.i.a.m.l.g. in a wide variety of forms, usually urçık/urçuk and the like, and perhaps even NE Tuv. e:rgı:ş Pal. 592. Türkü(?) kađırık aġırçak graffiti on a spindle whorl found on Olohon Island, Lake Baikal; date quite uncertain, the area is that of the Üç Kurikan tribe; kađırık is prob. a Proper Name ETY II 158. Xak. XI aġırşuk (the ğayn carries both kasra and damma) filkatil-'miġşal 'spindle whorl' Kaş. I 149; XIV Muh.(?) (among spinner's implements) (VU) al-taġala 'weight', i.e. 'whorl' aġırçuk Rif. 162 (only); Kom. XIV urçık 'spindle' (sic?) CCG; Gr.: Kıp. XIII al-taġalatu'lali l'il-'miġşal 'spindle whorl' aġırşak (şin unvocalized) Hou. 17, 7; XIV aġurçuk al-satrac wa'l-nard 'chess and draughts(men)'; aġurşak taġalatu'l-'miġşal; and anything that resembles it is called aġurşak İd. 16; xv *taġala awurçuk; in margin Tkm. aġırçak Tuh. 11a. 1; Osm. XVI ff. aġırşak 'spindle whorl' in two texts TTS II 11; III 7.*

PUD oġurġa: 'backbone'. Almost the only stable elements about this word in modern languages are the meaning, the initial o- and the -r-. The last syllable varies between -ġa and -ka (in the Uyg. text it might be either) but -ġa: is more probable. If so, it might be a Dev. N. fr. oġur-, bearing the same relation morphologically to oġruġ as, say, bilge: to billġ. This is the likeliest explanation; but the only early occurrence of the word is in a late Bud. Tantric text, possibly XIII or XIV, and it might be a Turkish l.-w. in Mong. (oğurğa would be the form assumed by oğruğ in Mong., cf. uğurka for ukruk) re-borrowed in the Mong. form; there does not, however, appear to be any trace of such a Mong. word. S.i.a.m.l.g. in a wide variety of forms; in some -m-, -n-, -ŋ-, or zero take the place of the first -ğ- and in others a -t- is inserted after the -r-, producing such forms as NC Kir. omurtka, Kzx. omirtka, and SW Az. onurğa, Osm. omurğa, Tkm. oñurğa. Uyğ. VIII ff. Bud. D oğurla- /oğrıla:- Den. V. fr. oğrı; 'to steal'. Oddly enough, while oğur is a rare Sec. f. of oğrı: oğurla:- seems to be the oldest form of this verb, so much so that Kaş. was inclined to confuse it with uğurla:-. S.i.a.m.l.g. in a wide variety of forms. Uyğ. viii ff. Bud. ađnağunuḡ tavarın oğurladı-mız erser 'if we have stolen other people's property' U II 85, 21-2; TT IV 8, 69; Xak.

D ağırlal- Hap. leg.; Pass. f. of ağırla:-. In III 344 Kaş., discussing the Pass. f. of verbs ending in -la:-, gives as an example er ağırladı: 'the man was honoured' (ukrima), and goes on to say that ağırlan- is also permissible (cāza) but that the former is commoner (aktaru'l-isti'māl). Experience, however, shows that the contrary is the case.

D ağırlan- Refl. f. of ağırla:-. S.i.s.m.l.g. w. some phonetic changes, usually for 'to be heavy; to feel ill or depressed', and in SW Osm. 'to be discreet, dignified'. Xak. xı er ağırlandı: 'the man was honoured' (ukrima), the -n- being substituted (muddala) for -l-; and one says ol bu: atnı: ağırlandı: 'he reckoned that this horse was valuable' (ğāli); also used for 'to reckon something to be heavy' (taḡil) Kaş. I 291 (ağırlanur, ağırlanma:k); a.o. PU ekek Hap. leg., unless mis-spelt in Kıp. xv 'ayb 'shame' ilik Tuh. 24b. 4 there is no other trace of such a word, and lâm and kâf are sometimes confused with one another; cf. ekeklik. Xak. XI ekek işler: al-mümisa mina'l-nisâ 'a prostitute' Kağ. I 78.

PU?D ögek/ögük, the first apparently the Man.-A form of the second. A term of affection(?) of uncertain origin. The suggestion in v. G. ATG, para. 57 that it is a Dim. f. of I ög hardly fits the context of its being addressed to a son; the theory that it is a Dev. N. fr. ö- seems semantically more suitable. Uyğ. VIII ff. Man.-A yerme ögl kapı antağ ögek sav sözleyü umayay 'and his mother and father will not be able to speak such understanding(?) words' (as to enlighten his mind) M I 15, 1-3; Bud. in PP 5, 8; 6, 6; 9, 6; 16, 3 speeches addressed by the king to his son Eğdü öglü tegin begin amrak ögükim and in do. 26, 3 the old man says to the king 'why are you sending your god-like, jewel-like ögükünüzni to the land of death?'. In these contexts it is clearly an alternative word for 'son', but 'sensible, understanding' hardly seems very appropriate.

ükek originally 'box' or the like; hence metaph. 'a wall tower' on a city wall, Arabic burc, in certain contexts with the metaph. meanings of that word. Survives only(?) in NE Tuv. ügek 'a small confined space, e.g. dog kennel, the interior of a covered cart, sentry box', and NC Kır. ükök 'a small box for carrying food'. Xak. PU egir 'a bridge', a medicinal root. An unfortunate resemblance to Pe. aygar, a l.w. from Greek abōon 'Acorus calamus' led Brock Jones in his Index to Kip, to translate this word thus, but the two words and their meanings are quite different. Perhaps survives in NC K, as in a medicinal plant used as a stomachic: Çağ, xv ff. ökir (so spelt) 'medicinal root (a bitter plant) which is used in curing the stomach'. In Pe. wan; the best kind is in China San. 109r. 21 (the last statement is correct, 'galangale' is a corruption of Pe. xil-wān which is a l.w. fr. Chinese ho(?)-liang-chiang): (Kip, xiv egir (with -g-) al-ahkam 'black' (a word specially used of horses); also pronounced eygir İd. 19, seems to be a different word): Osm. xiv ff. egir c.i.a.p., esp. in Ar. and Pe. dicts. translating al-waac and synonymous words TTS II 562; III 237; IV 279.

ögür 'a herd', esp. of horses, but also of other animals; this meaning survives in some modern languages, but it now usually means (of an animal) 'tame, domesticated'; (of a person) 'friend, comrade' (i.e. a member of the same group). Sis m.d.g.; in NB, NC usually pronounced to ör/ür. movement' Vel. 69 (for San., see SW); Kip. 194 'örük in margin in second hand egrük' Tüb. 26b. 12; Osm. XIV ff. egrük (so transcribed, but sometimes perhaps egrük) 'a place where water collects, pond'; occasionally 'whirlpool'; e.g. TT I 255; II 363; III 238; IV 280; XVII egrük in Rind. 120 (cf. 126 'pool' F. also gubük 'whirlpool' San. 109, 7).

D egrük N.Ac. fr. egrük-; etymologically 'a single act of twisting', but normally 'whirlpool' and the like. Cf. egrük. There is no reasonable doubt that the spelling in Kan. should be tayhuvallu 'whirlpool'; the MS. has tayhürü 'vast plain, quiescent' which is not apposite. S'im m.g., usually in such forms as ıyırım/ırım. Note that in SW Osm. egrüm is sometimes a Sec. f. of edrim, q.v. Cf. ırkin. Xak. XI egrüm tayhuvantül-mä (sic? see above) wa huca mustanqa'uhu 'a whirlpool in water'; and also 'stagnant water' Kay. I 107; Çağ. xv ff. Vel. 69 (eğrik); eyrüm süyun döne döne akış 'a swirling flow of water' (followed by translation, with quotns. of erdem mis-spelt in this way) Vel. 41; eyrüm 'the twists and swirls (piç wa xam wa gardışi) which occur in the flow of waters and rivers' San. 37r. 21 (followed by a refce. to the mistake in Vel.).

PU öğrem N.o.a.b.; syn. with, and perhaps merely a mis-spelling of, öğen; spelt with ö- which often represents -ğ- in these texts. Uyğ. VIII ff. Civ. öğrem süy içip 'drinking water from the brook' TT VIII L21; a.o. do. 15 (q̄uisoz).

D öğrüng N.Ac. fr. öğrünä-; 'joy, joyfulness'; occasionally spelt öğrüngü. Survives only in NE Ser üğrüngüs R I 1821; Krak. 620b. Türkü VIII ff. öğrüngün öğrüngün (M. 199) 'joy and gladness' (cf. 199 'gladness') uluğ öğrüngün öyüman 'with great joy and merriment' TT II 8, 56; 0.0. do. 8, 54; 10, 32; Uyğ. VIII ff. Man.-A uluğ öğrüngün M I 25, 3-4; Bud. Sanskrit prätināma 'feeling of joy' öğrüng kōṅṅiṅṅōṅṅōṅ (sic) TT VIII A20; öğrüng sevinç 'joy and delight' do. G40; same Hend. U III 4, 12; Sw. 266, 6, etc.; öğrüng by itself is fairly common; Civ. 267 199 is fairly common; TT I 100 'öğrüngün' 'gladness' (cf. 100 'gladness').

DIS. V. EGR-

egir- 'to surround, encircle (something Acc.); to twist, spin (something Acc.).' Although there is in Uyğ. a parallel or Sec. f. epir- of this verb, as there is of eğ- and some of its derivatives, it is unlikely that this is a Caus. E. of eğ- since both are Trans. verbs and this one has no Caus. connotation. It is almost syn. w. eyir- but can head a Caus. E. of forms like NE, NC ir- and connotations of word or eyir-. San. 109ff II 652. Tu VIII (Kül Teğir ad. 10), trans. 'I (one name) tokaz erig egrim tokadı' 'rode round nine men and stole them' I N 6; Te Teğir yoğurtu egrip ölü tınoiz 'at Te Teğir's funeral we surrounded and killed the clan (see 1425) of Teğir, too warily' 7; similar pp. II 31; III 2 (see 651).

egir- 'to surround, encircle (something Acc.)'; 'to spin' or 'to twist silver' PP 41, 2; a.o. do. 2, 4 (I egrü 42, 3; 43, 2); Civ. Kita bulğay süy egr-mesleği 'who will not pay court(?) to you' TT I 8, 9; iğ toğa egridi sözi illres (Hend.) have surrounded you' do. 17, 0.0. egrir- do. 38; egrir- do. 79; Xiv. ıpran- and translated it by the same word nālıdan-i zār 'to moan, groan'; but this seems to be merely a mistranslation based on a false etymology.

D ekış- Hap. leg.; Co-op. f. of ek-. Xak. xı ol maņa: tariğ ekışdı: 'he helped me to sow the seed' ('alā badri'l-zar'); also used for competing Kaş. I 187 (ekışür:, ekışme:k).

PUD 1 iğeş- Recip. f. of iğe-; 'to quarrel' and the like. The modern form suggests fairly definitely medial -ğ-, not -k-, and less definitely initial é- rather than l-. Xak. xı ikki: buğra: iğeşdi: taşādama'l-fahlān wa t'āddā 'the two camel stallions attacked and bit one another' Kaş. I 187 (prov.; no Aor., or Infin., possibly regarded as a second meaning of éğeş- which it follows immediately).

PU(D) 2 iğeş- Hap. leg.; 'to rely on one another'. Listed between 2 öğüş- and éğeş-. Clearly a Recip. f. but not semantically connected with any known verb, except that there is a faint connection with the third, unexplained, meaning of iğen-. Xak. xı kişli:ler ısta: b:r birrike: iğeşdi:ler 'the people relied (ittakala) on one another in the matter' Kaş. I 187 (iğeşür:, iğeşme:k).

D 2 öğüş- Recip./Co-op. f. of öğt-. Survives in NE Tuv. ögeş- 'to rub one another' and the like; must also have survived fairly recently in SW Osm. since in a XVII-XVIII Ar. dict. daras (of the teeth) 'to be set on edge' is translated ekşi nesne çıgnemek ile diş öğüşmek 'to grind one's teeth owing to biting something sour' TTS I 736 (uyuşmak). Türkü VIII ff. toğan kuşu:ıy tırnak: öğüşü:pen 'the falcon's claws ground against one another' İrkB 44: Xak. xı ol maņa: tariğ öğüşdi: 'he helped me to grind the corn' (ıfı tahni'l-burr, etc.); also used for competing Kaş. I 187 (öğüşür:, öğüşme:k).

Almost certainly borrowed from Tokharian; Prof. Werner Winter has told me that the source is more likely to be Tokharian A than Tokharian B okso. The A form has survived only as a [gap] in a much damaged text (Sieç and Siegling A 459b. 1) but can be restored fairly confidently as okäs, which would have become ökez/ököz in Standard Turkish and öker in the l/r language from which the First Period Mong. loan-words were taken. Türkü viii ff. (a man fastened) *ekli: öküzü*g 'two oxen' (to one yoke) lrb 25; a.o. do. 37: *Uyğ. viii ff. Mon. AL al Preliminary note. There were certainly two ancient words spelt a:l. It is doubtful whether there was a third, probably al if genuine; see below.

I a:l 'device, method of doing something'; originally quite neutral and used for honourable as well as dishonourable devices and methods; later it became pejorative only and meant specifically 'deceit, guile, dirty trick'. In the early period usually used in the Hend. al çevış or al altağ. Became a l.-w. in Pe.; survives only(?) in SW Osm. al; Tkm. a:l. xix Osm. lexicographers regarded it as foreign, Red. 179 describing it as Pe. and Sami 47 as a corruption of Ar. hila, 'better not used'. See Doerfer II 516. Türkü viii ff. yég a:lğ bulu:şğalı: una:ma:du:kılar 'they did not agree on finding a good device' Toyok III 2v. 5-6 (ETY II 179): Uyğ. viii ff. Man. al altağ uzanmaklıkığ (or uzanmaklarığ) taşkarıp 'putting out the skillful use of devices (Hend.)' TT III 68; same phr. but üntürüp 'promoting' do. 122; al çevış M III 44, 4 (i) (damaged): *Bud. 2 a:l 'scarlet'; a l.-w. in Mong. (Kow. 71; Halted 16) for the colour of the (Chinese) scarlet ink with which the rulers sealed documents; also borrowed in Russian as alyi, same meaning. S.i.s.m.l.; in SW Tkm. a:l. Cf. kızıl. See Doerfer II 517. Türkü viii ff. Man. al [gap] keđip 'putting on a scarlet (robe)' TT II 8, 67-8: *Uyğ. viii ff. 3 al if really an ancient word, meant 'front, facing, prior position' but there is great doubt whether it was. In the early period it occurs only with a 3rd Person Poss. Suff. in the Dat., Abl. and Loc. and these words might equally well be the same cases of alın, q.v. The earliest authorities for the existence of al as such are Vel. and San., but in Çağ., too, the word is attested only in suffixed oblique cases; it is possible that by this period a word al had been formed by a kind of false etymology fr. oblique cases of alın. It certainly seems to exist in some modern languages, but is still, except in Kaz., apparently used only in oblique cases. Such words are SE Türki ayl BŞ 10; Jarring 16; NC Kır., Kzx. alda, aldan, ağa and similar forms in NW Kaz.; in NE the situation is complicated by the fact that alın when carrying suffixes would become ald. There is a parallel problem in the question whether there was an ancient word alt or whether this, too, is a back formation fr. alın, q.v., and there is a good deal of confusion between the modern forms of these two groups of words. The following is the relevant evidence regarding this word. Uyg. viii ff. Man. (in a fragmentary text apparently containing a simile about a fish) [?su]v kodı suv éyın barsar ol suvuğ adaki [gap]dağ bolsar uluğ kumka tursar suv kum alıpa [?]lin-seer 'if (the fish) goes downstream along the water, and the end of the watercourse is blocked(?) and stops at a great sand dune, and if the water soaks into the front of the sand dune' (the fish is left high and dry) M III 37,

1-5 (ii): Civ. TT I 129-30 is read beg tamğası elğıde ornağlığ orun anıpa 'a beg's seal is in your hand, and a firm seat. . .'; the last word is meaningless and the editors suggest an emendment to alıpa: (Xak.) xiii(?) Tef. (do not punish me) bu kâfirler alında 'in the presence of these infidels' 49: Çağ. xv ff. alında/alyıda önünde 'in the presence of, before' Vel. 27 (quotns. containing alyıda and alınım); alı ön ve yan 'front, side' do. 27 (quoton. containing anıy alyıda); al (1) huđür 'presence' (Vel.'s first quoton.); (2) pişāni 'forehead' (quoton. beginning Nawā'i alıpa yazğanni 'that which is written on Nawā'i's forehead'; the word here is clearly alın); Xwar. xiii(?) bir köl arasında alında bir iğaç kördi 'he saw a tree in front of him in the middle of a lake' Oğ. 71: Kom. xiv teñri alında 'in the presence of God' and o.o. CCG; alında ki kaş 'the front saddle-bow' CCI; Gr. 35 (quotns.): Kip. xiv quddām 'in front of' alında: Bul. 14, 4.

1 é:l the basic, original meaning was 'a political unit organized and ruled by an independent ruler'; the most convenient short term in English is 'realm'. In the early texts it usually occurs in association with other political terms, xağan the ruler of such a realm, bođun its people, törö: the unwritten customary law under which it was administered by the ruler, uluş the geographical area which is occupied and öge: the chief administrative officer of the ruler. From Xak. onwards, but not apparently earlier, it developed some extended meanings. In particular it often seems to mean 'the community, the people of the realm', displacing bođun in this sense. As the Turks became involved in international politics it also began to have an international application and came to mean 'organized international relations' from which the transition to 'peace', one of its modern meanings, was an easy one. It is an open question whether 'courtyard', one of the meanings given by Kaş., belongs to this word, but it is probably merely a metaph. use meaning literally 'the realm of the owner of the house'. The phr. usually spelt é:l kün in two words, which is first noted in KB and seems to mean 'people', has given some trouble. The theory in Id. that kün here is 1 kün 'sun' is not at all plausible. The most reasonable explanation is that the second syllable is the Collective Suff. -gün and that the spelling should be é:lğün in one word. S.i.a.m.l.g. as él/el/il meaning 'country, province; people, community (esp. one's own people as opposed to foreigners)' and, less often, 'peace'. ol both (1) an indeclinable Demonstrative Adj. 'that' as opposed to bu: 'this'; (2) a declinable Demonstrative Pron. 'that', also used for the 3rd Pers. Pron. 'he, she, it'. As a Pron. it was also used in the early period as the equivalent of the copula 'is, are'. In this last case there are two usages: (a) subject (sometimes implied, not stated), predicate, ol, meaning that the subject is the same as, or has the quality described by, the predicate; (b) subject, ol, meaning that the subject 'is that', often followed by a subordinate clause as in such phr. as ümid ol 'my hope is (that . . .)'. C.i.a.p.a.l.; in most the form is still ol, but in one or two the -l has been elided, prob. comparatively recently (the only early occurrence, once in Türkü, is almost certainly a scribal error). Such forms are SE Türki o; o, u Shaw, BŞ, farring, and SW Az., Osm. o. In one or two other languages, e.g. SW Tkm. o occurs as a colloquial form, beside the more formal ol. Mon. V. AL-

al- 'to take', with all the shades of meaning of the English word, 'to seize, collect (a debt), receive, accept', and some others as well, such as 'to take off' (a cap, saddle, etc.), 'to marry' and (as an abbreviation of satım al-) 'to buy'. S.i.a.m.l.g. The word is used in many idioms and compounds in which it is sometimes the second element. When it is the first in expressions like alip bar- and alıp kêt- 'to take away', and alıp kel- 'to fetch', the two words are often fused and assume forms like appar-, ekkit-, akkel-. Jarring 18-19 lists about 30 phr. beginning with alip (alip) in SE Türki. In compounds in which al- is the second element the meaning largely depends on the form of the first verb. In modern NE and NC languages a Ger. in -p is followed alternatively by al- or bér-, e.g. satıp al- 'to buy', satıp bér- 'to sell'. In such cases Pal. says that al- in NE Tuv. connotes action taken in one's own interest or for oneself. But, if the first element is a Ger. in -a/-c-, al- has the same meaning as u- 'to be able'. In such expressions al-, like u-, is usually, but not always, in the Neg. f.; phr. like kele almadı 'he could not come' are common, but phr. like kele aldı 'he was able to come' occur also. The date when this idiom evolved is uncertain. The earliest languages in which it is traceable are Kom. and Çağ., but no examples have been noted in Xwar., Kip., or any earlier language or in the SW languages. It has often been suggested, e.g. in RI 348, that the SW Impossible f. barama- 'to be unable to go' is a contraction of bara al- but this is an error, the second element is u-, q.v. In the basic meaning 'to take' the object is in the Acc., the source from which it is taken in the Abl., and the third-party beneficiary, if mentioned, in the Dat. Türkü VIII al- is common, usually 'to capture (by military action)', e.g. (I killed their xağan and) élin anta: altım 'thereupon took his realm' II E 27; but ol saviğ alıp 'accepting that statement (as true)' IS 7, IIN 6; Tür[geş xağan] kızın ertiniğ: uluğ törün oğlıma: alı: bértim 'I took the daughter of the Türgeş xağan (in marriage) for my son with great honour' II N 10; a.o. IE 8, II E 8 (I é:l); VIII ff. ögüm öti:n alayın 'I will accept my mother's advice' IrkbB 58; kaltı: yürüñ taşığı alsar 'if a man takes a white stone' Toy. 15 (ETY II 58): Man. antıp savın alıp Chuas. 137; a.o. 198: Yen. altı: yegir:mi: yaşuma: almış kunçuyım 'my wife whom I married at the age of sixteen' Mal. 48, 7: Uyg. VIII al- 'to capture' occurs four times in Şu.: VIII ff. Man.-A sizlerde almış ağu 'the poison received from you' M I 19, 15: Man. alıp amtı 'now accept' (the worship of all men) TT III 3-4: Bud. al- (in TT VIII usually al-) 'to take' is common, e.g. tavartin altımız yupladımız erser 'if we have taken and used their property' TT IV 6, 44; mayrı

The modern meaning is 'ambassador, representative of government in foreign countries', and there is nothing in the early texts to suggest that it ever had any other meaning, although in some Uyg. Civ. contracts it appears as a Proper Name. It seems clear that in the early period it was not a hereditary title, but, like bilge: é:l öge:sl: çavuş, etc., an appointment normally held by a commoner and not a member of the royal family. Cf. yala:vaç. See Doerfer II 656. *Uyg. D alçak 'gentle, mild, humble' in a laudatory sense; survives in this meaning in NE Alt., Tel. R I 423: NC Kır.: NW Kaz. and SW Tkm., but in SW Osm. and Krim it has (recently?) acquired a pejorative meaning 'low (in stature or character), base, vile'. Prima facie a N./A.S. fr. alça-, but this verb is very poorly attested, occurring only in Osm. Red. 184, in a pejorative sense; the Pass. f. alçal- is, however, better attested in recent Osm. dicts. In these circumstances it is possible that alça- is a back formation fr. alçak and that the latter is a Den. N. for an earlier altçak* der. fr. alt, but this depends on the question whether the latter, q.v., is an ancient word. See aşak. Xak. xı alçak al-halimu'l-şarif 'gentle, mild; graceful, polite' *Kağ. alt as in the cases of 3 al and ast, there is grave doubt whether this is really an independent ancient word. If it was it meant 'the bottom, or lower surface (of something)'. It has been suggested that altın, astın, which is synonymous with it, and üstün, which is often used in antithesis to it, all carry the suffix -dun/-dün/-tun/-tün, etc., which is clearly recognizable in words like öpdün and kédin, and that these are crases of altın, astın, üstün. This is probably correct, but it does involve assuming that alt and ast are in a class by themselves, and different from iç and 2 taş which are the bases of comparable forms içtın and taştın but are also normal N./A.s, since they are used only in suffixed forms. If this is correct, then alçak, q.v., can also be regarded as a crasis of altçak and derived from this word. The only medieval forms of this word, always in suffixed form, are in Tef. Kom. and Kip. In modern languages there is some confusion between alt and 3 al, but suffixed forms of alt meaning 'below' certainly occur in some NE, NW, and SW languages, and similar forms of ast with the same meaning in SE, NC, SC, and some NW languages. D uldağ (?uiduğ) Den. N. fr. ul: 'the sole' (of a boot, etc.); the earliest form was perhaps ulduğ (see ulduğluğ). S.i.a.m.l.g. as ultağ with minor phonetic variations, in SW Tkm. and XX Anat. (SDD 1088) oltağ and in NE Koib., Kaç., Sag., (R I 1699, 1700.) Khak. and Tuv. as ulduğ/ultuğ. Uyğ. VIII ff. Civ. the word appears as ulyak in TT VII 42, 1 a very late text prob. transcribed from an Arabic original, in which it was misread; (a manly man is equal to a jewel) erdemisz kişi etük içindeki ultağ (written ulyak) birle tüz ol 'a man without manly qualities is equal to the sole in a boot': Xak. XI uldağ asfalı'l-xuff 'the sole of a boot' Kaş. I 116 (prov.): Çağ. D altınç Ordinal f. of altı: 'sixth'; the only form recorded in the early period; the longer form altınçı: first appears in the Vienna MS. of KB, and s.i.a.m.l.g. w. minor phonetic changes. Uyğ. Þ D İldrük prob. Pass. Dev. N. fr. İldür- (İltür-); 'the plant rue, Peganum harmala'. İldrük is fully vocalized, but İldrük in III 412 in a section containing dissyllables with first syllables ending in two consonants is completely unvocalized and in III 21, 22 the only vowel points are a taşid and damma over the dāl, which is presumably an error for a cazm over the dāl and a damma over the rā. N.o.a.b.; SW xx Anat. ilezik 'rue' is more likely to be a corruption of yüze:rlik, q.v., than of this word. The situation is further complicated by the fact that in III 12 it is ıldrük and not ilrük that is described as being in the language of Uç and Barsğan. Xak. x1 ıldrük al-harmal 'rue' Kaş. III 412; a.o. III 12, 22 (yüdüğ)—Uç x1 ilrük al-harmal I 105.

D oldrum abbreviated N.S.A. fr. oldur- (olur-); lit. 'a single act of sitting'; but actually 'crippled, incapable of standing up'. N.o.a.b. Xak. x1 oldrum (vocalized oldurum in the MS., but in a section containing dissyllables with the first syllable ending in two consonants) al-mu'ad minal-nās 'a crippled person' Kaş. III 412; xiv Rbg. (he saw that some were blind, some lame, some in pain) kimin olturum 'some crippled' R I 1091; Muh. (after 'lame' axsak) al-mu'ad olturum Mel. 48, 5; Rif. 142.

Dis. V. ALD-

élet- (yélt) the basic meaning seems to be, physically 'to carry', but with several extended meanings like 'to bring (something Acc.)', to carry away (something Acc.). It is not clear whether the word was originally monosyllabic or dissyllabic, and, if the latter, whether the second vowel was -e- or -i-, but on balance it was prob. originally élt-. E öllüt- 'to kill'. This word has been erroneously read in Türkü VIII T 3. The photographs, which are clear, show that the actual word in the inscription is ötmış, but there is a small crack in the stone between ö and t which has been taken for an l. The text reads (you abandoned your xağan and surrendered (to the Chinese). Because you surrendered) teprı: ötmış erinç 'Heaven, no doubt, abandoned you'.

D alta- = Den. V. fr. I a:l; although I a:l and alta:g, q.v., were originally neutral in meaning and only later became pejorative, alta- always meant 'to deceive, trick, cheat (someone)', with a few extended meanings like 'to soothe (a child), to console' in some modern languages. S.i.a.m.l.g. See Doerfer II 533. Uyg. VIII ff. Civ. allıç çevışliğ kişiler altayı turur 'resourceful (Hend.) men are constantly deceiving you' TT I 26; yağı yavlak altayur 'enemies and wicked people deceive you' do. 39: XIV *Chin.-Uyg. Survives only(?) in NW Kar. eİtin- 'to be carried, brought, sent' R I 826; Kow. 183. Uyg. VIII ff. Bud. Sanskrit antimadehadhāri ('a sage) who is wearing his last (human) body' eñ kénkl etözög éltinde:çi TT VIII A.48; uluğ arvişlar élt(l)igin tutsarlar éltinserler 'if they grasp and carry (with them) the great king of spells' U II 73, 5 (ii).

D altur- = Caus. f. of al-; properly 'to order (someone Dat.) to take (something Acc.)', but in some modern languages 'to allow (something Acc.) to be taken from oneself'. S.i.a.m.l.g. Cf. altuz-. Xak. XI men andan yarma:k alturdum 'I ordered that the money should be taken (bi-axd) from him' Kaş. I 223 (altururmen, alturma:k): Çağ. xv ff. aldur- = Caus. f. girānidan wa giriftār kardan 'to order to take, to have (someone) made a prisoner' San. 46r. 22 (quotns.): Xwar. XIII aldur- 'to order to take' Ali 35: XIV ditto Qutb 7; 'to have taken from one' Nahc. 325, 4: Osm. XIV ff. aldır-/aldur- in several texts TTS I 19; II 28.

D İldur-, İltur- Preliminary note. The same inconsistencies of vocalization occur in these two verbs as occur in İl- and İl-, but there is no clear evidence of the vocalization of the first in KB and the Çağ. form of the second looks like a Sec. f. of altur-. The Infin. of the first is apparently spelt -ma:k, later corrected to -me:k in the MS. of Kaş.

VUD İldur- = Caus. f. of İl-; 'to order (someone Acc.) to descend (from somewhere Abl.); to bring (something Acc.) down'. Survives as İldır- in NC Kır., Kzx. Xak. XI ol anı: ta:ğdın İldurdi: 'he ordered him to descend (anzalahu) from the mountain'; also spelt with -n-, éndürdi: Kaş. I 224 (İldurur, İldurma:k; see above); KB uluğ tağ başın yerke İldrür egip 'the great mountain lowers its head to the ground bowing' 2647; in 1003 the Vienna MS. has İldrür for éndürür.

D İltür- = Caus. f. of İl-; 'to order (someone Dat.) to hang up (something Acc.)', with extended meanings like 'to fasten, hook, button' in some modern languages. D ulati: prob. Ger. in -i: fr. ulati-; used in two ways: (1) after one or more N.s or P.N.s, sometimes linked by -li: . . . -li: or, less often, in the Loc., meaning 'et cetera' (see v. G. ATG, para. 287); (2) occasionally, prob. only in translations fr. other languages, as a Conjunction meaning 'and' (see do., para 415). N.o.a.b. Türkü viii ff. (we, persons of distinction, thirty in all have arrived) at: Öz A:pa: Toto:k ulati: 'one named Öz A:pa: Totok and the rest' *Tun. VU?D ülete:ti: 'silk handkerchief'; perhaps Dev. N. fr. ület- in the sense of a section of a large piece of silk fabric divided into equal parts. Survives only(?) in SW xx Anat. alatu a word for 'silk handkerchief' used by Türkmen, SDD 192. Uyg. viii ff. Civ. ülete:ti (front vowels) occurs twice in Fan. Arch.; bir ülete:ti (purchased with one other article for 4 bakırs) l. 55; üç ülete:ti (purchased with two other articles for 6 bakırs) l. 144: Xak. xi ülete:ti: 'a piece of silk (qi'a harir) which a man keeps in his pocket to wipe his nose with' Kaş. I 136.

PU?F Élteber a title for a tribal ruler subordinate to a superior ruler. N.o.a.b. in Turkish texts, but very common in Chinese historical texts transcribed chieh (or ssü) li fa (Giles 1,472 or 10,281 6,885 3,676). In spite of the dissimilarity of their modern pronunciations, there is no reasonable doubt that Müller was right in making this identification in U II 94. Prob. a l.-w., if not a compound of I éil and the Aor. in -r of a verb which might have been teb*- or tev*- (but not the familiar tev- 'to pierce'). See Doerfer II 655. Türkü viii (Kül Tégin captured) Az élteberig 'the élteber of the Az' I N 3; Uygur élteber II E 37; [Karluk élt] éber II E 40 (restored from the context); bunça: bediç:in Toyğun élteber kelü:ti: 'Toyğun, the élteber, brought all these deprecators' I NE; a.o. Ix. 21: Uyg. viii ben b[. . . el]teber Şu. ede.

PUDC élteberlig Hap. leg.; P.N./A. fr. élteber. Türkü viii eki: élteberlig bođun (gap) 'two tribes ruled by éltebers' II E 38.

D ölütçi: N.Ag. fr. ölüt; 'one who deliberately takes life, murderer, executioner'. N.o.a.b. Uyg. viii ff. Chr. U I 9, 17 (bukağuluğçı): Bud. (that beg, having become beg of the town) erte keđ ölütcü boldı 'soon became very prone to taking life' Suv. 4, 9-10; (whoever for a long time) ölütçi bolsar 'is a taker of life' U III 4, 11; TT VI 89 (kit:ncı): Xak. xi (after ölüt) hence al-qatıl 'a killer' is called ölütçi: Kaş. I 52; KB 1737 (basıncı).

S altıncı: See altınc.

D altıncı: N./A.S. fr. altın; 'situated below'. Both this and the later form altındakı, first noted in Kıp., see altın-, s.i.s.m.l. Uyg. viii ff. Man. üstüncü altıncı teğriler 'the gods situated above and beneath (the earth)' TT III 169; Civ. altıncı TT VIII L.23, 43; üstüncü altıncı tapladı 'those above and beneath were pleased' TT I 128: (Xak.) xiii(?) Tef. altıncı/altıncı ditto 50.

D altunluğ P.N./A. fr. altun; 'possessing gold; golden; ornamented with gold'. S.i.a.m.l.g. Türkü viii ff. Man. altunluğ örgin üze 'on a golden throne' TT II 8, 68; Uyg. viii ff. Man. altunluğ yinçülüğ kap yérte 'in the land of gold and pearls' TT II 15, 8-10; Bud. altunluğ xua çeçed saçıp 'scattering golden-coloured flowers' USp. 101,

D ultuñluğ Hap. leg.; P.N./A. fr. ultuñ (uldağ). Brahmi -t- often represents -d-, and the word should perhaps be so spelt. The Sanskrit word translated by this is unintelligible, but it presumably means 'possessing boot-soles'. Uyg. VIII ff. Bud. ultuñluğlar TT VIII G.57.

eldiri: (?eldiri) basically either 'kid-' or 'lamb-skin'. Survives only(?) in NW Kaz. İltir 'lamb-skin' R I 1494. Xak. XI elri: al-badra wa hiya cildü'l-cady 'a milk bucket that is a goat-skin'; also called eldiri: bi-ziyadati'l-dāl Kaş. I 127; XIV Muh.(?) alk- 'to use up, finish, come to the end of (something Acc.); hence sometimes to destroy (something Acc.)'. v. G. ATG, para. 160 suggests that this is an Emphatic f. of al-, but this is unlikely since there is no real semantic connection and no evidence that the Emphatic Suff. was -k- as well as -ik-. Survives only (?) in SW xx Anat. alk- 'to destroy' SDD 97. Türkü VIII kop alkđımız 'we completed everything' (the tomb chamber, its ornamentation, and the memorial stone) I NE: Uyg. VIII ff. *Bud. ?S alığ syn. w. añığ, q.v., and perhaps a Sec. f. of it. In this meaning survives only(?) in SW xx Anat. aluk (of a man) 'bad' SDD 98. It is, however, possible that a word meaning 'crazy, stupid, mad', and the like, NE several dialects alığ R I 373; Tel. alu: do. 387; Khak. alığ and SW Osm. alık is a survival of this word. See Doerfer II 535. Kıp., Oğuz XI alığ al-radi' min kull şay' 'bad' of anything Kaş. I 64; also occurs in I 384, 6 in a verse (repeated in I 85, 5 with yavuz instead of alığ) (the men who reckoned it good fortune to have a guest have all disappeared) kaldı: alığ oyuk körüp evni: yıka:r baqiya'llađın idā ra'awu'l-hayāl naqadı axbiyatahum kaylā yanzil 'alayhi 'but those who, when they see a mirage, strike their tents in order that (a guest) may not lodge with them, have remained'; alığ is not specifically translated but must have meant 'wicked' or the like: Xwar. XIV alığ 'weak, inadequate' Qutb 8: Kıp. al-cabān 'cowardly' (opposite to 'brave' alp) alığ Hou. 26, 4: XIV alu: al-'āciz 'an ğarimihi 'weaker than (or inferior to) his adversary'; bu: bundan alu: dur 'this is inferior ('āciz) to that'; and for a'caz 'more inferior' they say alurak İd. 22: Osm. XIV ff. alu 'weak, inferior', often in contrast to ulu 'great' or yēğ 'better', common in XIV and XV and occurs in XVI TTS I 23; II 31; III 18; IV 19.

D alığ Hap. leg.; P.N./A. fr. I a:l; 'resourceful'. Uyg. VIII ff. Civ. TT I 26 (alta:-).

?D alık/aluk; it is an open question how many etymologically different words of these forms there are and which of them can be explained as Pass. Dev. N./A.s fr. al-. This is obviously true of the word in KB, and possibly true of Kaş.'s Oğuz meaning of alık. But it is less obviously true of Kaş.'s meaning of aluk, and rather improbable of the Kıp. meaning. It is difficult to connect NC Kır. alık 'peak, summit' R I 372 with any earlier meaning, but SW xx Anat. alık/aluk retains the second early Osm. meaning and has other meanings like 'driftwood carried away by a flood' which clearly represent a Dev. N. fr. al-. See Doerfer II 547. (O. Kır. IX ff. the word read aluk in Mal. 44, 2 is corrected to alp in Shcherbak's revised text): Xak. XI KB tükel bilse bolmaz kılıklarını yēme alsa bolmaz alıklarını 'it is impossible (for a servant) to understand completely (his master's) character, or to accept his habits(?) 4757 (for meaning see Osm.): Oğuz XI alık minqāru'l-tā'ir 'a bird's beak' Kaş. I 68; aluk er al-raculu'l-adla (sic, not al-asla 'bald' as in printed text) 'a sturdy, powerful man' I 67; Kıp. XIV aluk 'uddatu'l-dabba kā'in mā kāna 'any kind of equipment (harness, etc.) for a horse' İd. 21 (and alukla:- saucwā'l-'udda 'to put harness, etc. (on a horse)'): Osm. XIV alık 'habits' and the like in one XIV text; (however just a strange ruler may be) alığın anlayınca él yıkılır 'the country is disorganized until it gets to understand his habits'; alır ola cihānıñ alıgını bilir ola zamānıñ kılıgını 'he will come to accept the habits of this world and to know the character of the (present) age' TTS I 20—alık XVI translates al-qurtān 'a thick felt put on a horse's back beneath the saddle' in one text II 28.

D 1 ulağ Dev. N. fr. ula:-; lit. 'something joined on', and the like with various specific applications. Survives only(?) in NC Kır. ulo: 'joining, attaching', and SW Osm. ulak 'something within easy reach'. Cf. sapığ. Uyg. VIII ff. Man. -A ulağ sapağda 'in endless succession' M III 13, 19 (ii): Bud. noted only in the Hend. ulağ sapığ which is common in TT VI, e.g. tuğa ölü ulağ sapığ 'the endless succession of birth and death' 015; o.o. 312, 345, 388, etc.; Suv. 61, 17: Xak. XI ulağ ruq'atu'l-tawb 'a patch on a garment' Kaş. I 122.

PD 2 ulağ a technical term for a horse used for carrying goods or riding, more particularly a horse for hire and a post horse. The specific meaning seems to be that it is one of a string of horses available for hire or use, and it may originally have meant a string of horses rather than a single animal, but if so this meaning became obsolete very early. It is therefore prob. a Dev. N. fr. ula:-, etymologically identical with 1 ulağ; but with a specialized meaning. An early l-w. in Mong. as uġla'aulağa (Haenisch 162, Kow. 394) 'posthorse, relay horse'. S.i.a.m.l.g. in a wide range of forms including such divergent ones as NC Kır. ılo:, ulo:, uno:. See Doerfer II 521. Uyg. VIII ff. Civ. ulağ 'transport horse let out on hire' is common in late contracts e.g. maña Sara- puçka Usunka barğu eşek ulağ kergek bolup 'as I, Saraçuç, needed donkeys and transport animals (or "donkeys for transport") to go to Usun'. USP. 3, 2-3; (I gave one roll of cloth for) Mekiliñ Kurçañın ulağka 'Mekiliñ Kurça's transport animal(s)' (and fifteen rolls of cloth for) Kültürtey ulağ terike 'the hire of Kültürtey's transport animal(s)' do. 31, 9-13; o.o. 38, 15; 39, 4; 91, 20: Xak. XI ulağ 'any horse (faras) which an express post-rider (al-barıdu'l-musri) takes by order of the amir (i.e. beg) and rides until he finds another' Kaş. I 122; ıdğıl meni: tokuşğa: yövgil maña: ulağ:-a: 'send me to the battle, wa a'inni li-tu' tıyani faras yuballıgını ilā'l-har' and help me by giving me a horse to carry me to the battle' III 172, 12: Çağ. XV ff. ulağ/ulak at 'horse' Vel. 118 (quots.); ulağ/ulak (1) markah-i suwāri 'riding horse' (same quotn.); (2) payk wa qāşid 'a messenger, or courier' sent from one place to another; (3) kār bi-ucrat 'unpaid labour'; the author of the Burhān-i qāti included this as a Pe. word with the same meanings San. 85v. 21; Kıp. XIV ulak al-barid İd. 21: Osm. XIV ff. ulağ, more often ulak, once (XVII) in error uğlak, usually 'mounted messenger', occasionally (XIV, XV) 'post horse'; c.i.a.p. TTS I 717; II 922; III 702; IV 778.

uluğ 'big, great', physically and metaph., including such usages as 'grandfather'; eldest (son). Prob. a basic word and not a P.N./A in -luğ, since it has no semantic connection with u: and cannot be derived fr. u:-. C.i.a.m.l.g., but in SW, while ulu is the standard word in Tkm., it has been almost entirely displaced by böyük (bedük) in Az. and büyük in Osm. See Doerfer II 536. Türkü VIII uluğ 'great' (army, battle, ceremony) I E 28, 40; II N 10, E 34; uluğ oğlım 'my eldest son' II S 9; (I myself have become old and) uluğ boltım 'senior, advanced in years' T 56; o.o. T 5 (uđuz-); Ix. 3: VIII ff. uluğ ev 'a large residence' İrkB 9; Man. uluğ TT II 6, 6 and 15, etc.; *Yen. S 1ıkı See 1 yılık.

D alkiğ 'wide, broad'; well established in Uyğ., where it occurs only in the Hend. kép alkiğ, otherwise known only in NE in a curious variety of forms; Karağas alhiğ (sic); Khak., Koib. allıg; Şor alıg, aldiğ R I 373, etc.; Bas. 23; Tuv. alğığ Pal. 55.

Prima facie N./A.S. fr. alk-; the semantic connection is tenuous, but cf. alku:. There is a NE Khak., Tuv. verb algi- 'to expand, become broader', but this can hardly be as old as Uyğ., and may well be a late form of alk- or even a back-formation fr. alkiğ. Uyğ. VIII ff. Man.-A (you will live in that country) kéjin alkiğın muşuzun 'at your ease (Hend.), and carefree' *M III 30, 5-6 (i): Bud. D olğun N./A.S. fr. 1 ol-; 'ripe'. Survives only in SW Osm. and xx Anat. ulğun/ulkun SDD 1416-17. The word is not fully vocalized in Kaş. and the Ar. translation corrupt, but its identity is certain. Xak. xi seğremiş olğun konak (mis-spelt koyak qalla rab'(?)) habbat'l-cawars 'the quantity(?) of grains of millet was small' Kaş. III 167, 7 (the second word must be a Nom. as the third is a Gen. but rab' (not fully vocalized) does not look right); n.m.e.

D alkiñç Dev. N. fr. alkin-; 'coming to an end, annihilation', and the like. N.o.a.b., but cf. alkinçsız. The -u- is no doubt euphonic before a consonantal Suff. Uyğ. VIII ff. Bud. alkinçuka tegi burxan uruği üzülmöz 'the seed (i.e. succession) of Buddha will be unbroken until the end of time' TT VI 205; sézikliğ köpülümüz alkiñçuka tegi üzü-zün 'may our doubts be utterly dispelled' do. 380-1.

Dis. V. ALĠ-

?D alık- N.o.a.b. Morphologically obscure; hardly to be derived from al-; if the basic meaning is 'to fester, turn septic', perhaps fr. 2 a:l, lit. 'to be inflamed'. Xak. xi er alıktı: la'uma'l-racul 'the man was vile, miserly'; and one says ba-ṣ alıktı: tanaffata'l-cuḥ wa fasada 'the wound festered and turned septic', also used of anything that turns septic owing to mishaps in menstruation or parturition or to running sores' (nazra hā'id aw nufasā aw cunub) Kas. I 191 (verse; alıkar-, alıkmak:); KB (these things (bad temper, anger, etc.) are bad for a man) muni kılsa yalıku alıkar etöz 'if a man does them, his body deteriorates' 337 (so read, with Vienna MS. against bilse . . . ihkar in Fergana MS.).

alka- 'to praise', both in the religious and the ordinary sense; hence, more recently, 'to bless, pray for a blessing on (someone Acc.)', cf. alkiṣ. S.i.s.m.l. in NE, SE, NC; in SC and NW displaced by Mong. l.-w. makta- and in SW by Ar. nouns with et-. See 2 arka-. Uyğ. viii ff. Man. ağzınta sıznı öge alkayu 'praising (Hend.) with their mouths' TT III 97: Bud. kılmaşların yeme tutup öğdüm alkađım erser 'if I have accepted(?) and praised (Hend.) what they have done' Sur. 135, 4-5: Civ. TT I 170 (tüs-): Çağ. xv ff. alka-(mıṣ, etc.) alkiṣ et-vel. 28 (quotn.); alka- (spelt du'ā-yi xayr kardan 'to bless' San. 48v. 7 (quotns.))

D alkat- Caus. f. of alka-. N.o.a.b.; apparently, like ögüt-, q.v., used only in the Particip. f. alkatmış 'praiseworthy, provoking praise; blessed'. Uyğ. viii ff. Man.A. (at an auspicious moment, on an auspicious day) yeme alkatmış ayka 'in a blessed month' M I 26, 22-3; a.o. do. 24 (ögüt-): Man. alkatmış bés kat teprı yerinde 'in the blessed five-fold heavens' TT III 59: Bud. alkatmış iduk éliğ uluşuğ 'the blessed, holy realm, and country' TT VII 40, 17.

D olxut- Hap. leg. Der. f. olur-; Kaş. is quite right in saying that it is completely irregular, but olğut- would be equally irregular. It looks rather like an abbreviation of olğurt-, q.v. Xak. xi ol meni: olxuttı: aclasani 'he seated me'; originally with -ğ- olğuttı: li-anna'l-fi'l lā yu'addā bi'l-xā albatta because a verb is certainly not made Causative with

-x-, but is made Causative with -ğ-, e.g. odğur- 'to wake', tođur- 'to satiate' and in these the verb is made Causative with a -ğ- Kaş. I 260 (olxutur, olxutma:k).

D 2 elliğ P.N./A. fr. I é:l; originally lit. 'having a realm', it soon came to mean 'king', perhaps at first to supply a word with this meaning for translations of Bud. and Man. scriptures. In Uyg. Bud. it is often combined, or alternates, with xan: q.v. It then came to be spelt, and perhaps pronounced, elliğ with a singl -l-, and perhaps, at some uncertain later date, ilğ. In Persian it suffered further changes, e.g. to ilek, but this was prob. never really a Turkish word. Apart from the refecs. below, the only survivals seem to be in NC Kır. eldü 'populated'; eldik (1) 'democrat'; (2) in phr. calpı ıldik 'embracing all the people', and possibly ilik or ilik cılık 'neighbour'. See Doerfer II 661. Türkü viii elliğ (spelt with two l's) bođun ertim 'we were a people with a realm of our own' I E 9, II E 8; o.o. I E 15, II E 13 (élsirt-); I E 18 (ditto); I E 29, II E 24 (igār); eci:m xağan é:l: kamsağ boltukı:nta: bođun él(l)ig: ekigü: boltukı:nta: 'because my uncle the xağan's realm became insecure and the people and their ruler came to be at variance' I N 3: viii ff. Man. teñri él(l)ig TT II 6, 27, etc.; él(l)ig xan do. 10, 88; M III 14, 3 (iii) (igid-); Yen. él(l)ig er Mal. 26, 10 (dubious, text chaotic): Uyg. viii ff. Man.-A (our gracious father) edgü kilncılığ él(l)igemez 'our beneficent king' M I 10, 3-4: Man. él(l)ig begler 'bēgs who have a realm of their own' Wind. 250, 31: Chr. él(l)ig xan Maşıxa teñrike 'to the divine king, the Messiah' U I 6, 16-17; a.o. do. 7, 2: Bud. él(l)ig is used in three ways: (1) as an Adj. qualifying xan, etc., e.g. él(l)ig xan Suv. 314, 5; él(l)ig beg U III 41, 7 (ii); Sanskrit rāṣṭram 'kingdom' éleğ (sic) uluşı TT VIII C.1; (2) after Proper Names, usually representing Sanskrit rājā 'king', e.g. Prasenajj éleğ (so spelt) TT VIII H.2; Mağaytt(?) él(l)ig PP 4, 2; o.o. U II 22, 5 and 8; (3) by itself as a Noun, e.g. kañı él(l)ig 'his father the king' PP 6, 5: *Civ. elik survives only(?) in several NE languages R I 815, 1484 including Khak. and Tuv.; NC Kir., Kzx., and SW xx Anat. SDD 524; most authorities translate it 'roe-buck', but some 'female wild goat'; the original meaning was almost certainly 'roe-buck', rather than 'roe-deer' in general. Türkü VIII ff. IrKB 63 (çre); Xak. ?D elü:g (?elö:g) 'mockery, ridicule'; prima facie a N.Ac. fr. elü:-. An early l.-w. in Mong. as eleg (with Den. V. elegle-; Kov. 205-6, Haltōd 47). The modern forms, NE elek R I 811; elik do. 815; Khak. Bas. 334; NW Kar. elik R I 815; Köve. 183; Kaz. elek do. 811 look more like reborrowings fr. Mong. than direct survivals. Xak. XI. elü:g al-suxriya 'mockery' Kaş. I 122.

D ilüg Dev. N. fr. il-; 'attachment' and the like. N.o.a.b., but see iligliğ. There are several modern words of similar forms and some may be descended from this word, e.g. SW xx Anat. ilik çeken 'the cords that tie the ends of a camel's wooden collar together' SDD 786. Uyg. VIII ff. Bud. ev barklıg iligliğ tutuğuğ 'attachments and ties to home and household goods' USp. 105, 7-8.

D ölüg N./A.S. fr. öl-; 'dead; a dead person, corpse'. S.i.a.m.l.g. w. phonetic variations. NW Kaz. distinguishes between ül 'dead', and ülük 'corpse' R I 1849 but this is unlikely to reflect an earlier antithesis between ölüg and ülük, the word is consistently spelt ölüg in those alphabets, Runic and Manichean, which distinguish ğ and k. See Doerfer II 621. Türkü VIII tirigi: . . . ölügi: 'those of you who survived . . . those of you who died' IN 9 (yurt); VIII ff. (a dappled cow gave birth to a dappled calf . . .) ölü:gdre: ozml:ğ; IrKB 41; this could conceivably mean 'was saved from death', but the phr. used for this in 13, 17, and 49 is ölü:mde: ozml:ğ, and the form in 41 is prob. a scribal error: Man. ol ölügke katıldı 'he had intercourse with that dead (woman)' M I 5, 7; o.o. 5, 8; 6, 4; Yen. tirig ölüg ara: 'between the living and the dead' should perhaps be read in Mal. 26, 1: Uyg. XI ö:lüg (sic) al-mayyit 'dead' Kaş. I 72 (in a section containing words with two short vowels, the ð:- is an error); nine o.o., spelt ölüg, al-mayyit: KB ölügdin tirigke kumaru söz ol 'this is a legacy from the dead to the living' 270: XIII(?) At. ölüg 'dead, dead man' 17, etc.; Tef. ditto 245: XIV Rbg. ditto R I 1249: Çağ. xv ff. ölüük ('with -k') murda 'dead' *Vel. D ülüg Dev. N. fr. üle:-; 'share, part', (in the sense of one of several equal shares or parts); hence, metaph., 'destiny, fate'. Less common in modern times than the syn. word ülüş but survives in NE (several dialects) ülü: R I 1850; Tuv. ülüğ, and, with a wide range of meanings, SW xx Anat. ülü SDD 1430. Türkü VIII T 4 (2 atlıg, yada:ğ); ülüğ: (?sic, not ölügi): ança; ermiş erinç 'his fate was presumably this' (he attacked the enemy alone and was killed) Ix. 23; VIII ff. IrKB Postscript (alku): Uyg. XI ülüğ (bi-ismāmi 'f-alif 'with ü-, not ö-) al-naşib 'fate, destiny' *Kaş. XIV ülü: ('with front vowels', and ülüş) al-naşib Id. 20: Osm. XIV to XVII ülü 'share, part; destiny' in several texts TTS I 743; II 950; III 728; IV 802.

D ülgü: (1) as N.Ac. 'measuring, weighing'; (2) as Conc. N. 'weighing machine, pair of scales'; presumably Dev. N. fr. ül-, since it cannot be either morphologically or semantically derived fr. üle:-. S.i.a.m.l.g. except SE, with a wide range of meanings, usually 'model, pattern', in such applications as 'boot-last'. See Doerfer II 539. Uyg. VIII ff. Bud. ol buyanlıg ükmekniğ ülgüsün tepin ülgülegeli sanağalı bolğay 'it will be possible to measure and estimate the measure (Hend.) of that accumulation of merit' USp. 89, 1-2; similar phr. do. 4 and 14; Sw. 136, 22; o.o. Hüen-tś. 134 (batur-), 1834: Xak. D *élgek Conc. N. fr. élge:-; 'sieve' (for solids, as opposed to süzgü: 'strainer' for liquids). No doubt an old word, although there is no certain early occurrence. S.i.a.m.l.g. in a wide variety of forms, usually elek, élek, lék. The alternative modern word kalbur is a corruption of Persian ğurbâl. See Doerfer II 537. ülker 'the constellation of the Pleiades'; Kaş. alone gives a second meaning, but since most Turkish star names are names of other objects ('black bird', 'white stallion', etc.) used metaph. it is possible that this was the original meaning. S.i.a.m.l.g. usually as ülker and the like. Forms like ürker in some NC and SC languages are a fairly recent corruption. Uyğ. viii ff. Civ. ülker yultuz 'the 18th lunar station' TT VII 57, document T. D öll:ge: Hap. leg.; Dev. N. fr. öll:-, presumably in the sense of something moist and sticky. D almalık A.N. (Conc. N.) fr. alma; 'apple orchard' Survives in its literal meaning in some NW and SW languages, but used as a place-name over a much wider area. Does not occur in any Turkish text before Xv, and then only as a place-name, but occurs as a place-name in a Sogdian document found at Mount Mug in Fergana which can be firmly dated to the first quarter of VIII. It is unfortunately impossible to determine which of the various places with this name is referred to, but it must have been within reasonable distance of Fergana, and the name must be a legacy from the period when the Western Türkü ruled in this area. Türkü VIII in a much damaged Sogdian document, B1, relating to the issue of various kinds of military equipment, quivers, weapons, etc. it is stated (l. 4) that 'dmwkc' ywβw nr'z 'the assistant to the governor of Almaluk' (Sogdian d (Hebrew lamed) here used with its original value l) received five weapons of an uncertain kind, M. The extent of these depends on the question whether various words in oblique cases are to be taken as derived fr. alın or fr. 3 al, q.v., with a Poss. Suff. Alın 'forehead' survives only in SW Az., Osm., Tkm.; elsewhere it has been displaced by l.-w.s, usually Mong. maylay, less often Pe. pīşina. Uyğ. VIII ff. Bud. alınka tamğakka yürekke tegürüp 'touching the forehead, the throat, and the (region of the) heart' (with the left ring-finger) TT V 16 note A 54, 6: Civ. biçin künde alında bolur 'on the Monkey Day (the soul) is in the forehead' TT VII 19, 10; alın lakşanındın 'from the sign (Sanskrit l.-w.) on the forehead' do. 41, 20: (if the eyes are weak and watery) balık ötin közke alınka sırtır 'if one rubs fish's gall on the eyes and forehead' H I 155-6: o.o. do. 157, 159: Xak. xi alın al-cabha 'the forehead'; alın al-hayd wa'l-rukh 'the convex parts and slopes' of any mountain Kaş. I 78; alın töpi; yaşardı: 'the summits of the mountains (qulalu'l-cibāl) have become green with vegetation' II 79, 18: KB açuk tut yüzüñni yaruk tut alın 'keep your face open and your forehead bright' 5222; a.o. 2371' (kırğıl): XIII(?) At. (the world smiles and then) alın kaş çatar 'wrinkles its forehead and eyebrows' 205; Tef. alın 'forehead' 49: XIV Muh. al-cabha alın Me. 46, 11; Rif. 140: Kom. xiv 'forehead' alın CCI; Gr.: Kip. al-cabha alın Hou. 20, 1: xiv ditto İd. 19: xv cabha (maylay; in margin) alın Tuh. 11a. 12.

ulun 'a thin stick, or shoot'; hence 'the shaft of an arrow'. Survives in SW xx Anat. ulun 'the root of a wheat or barley plant' SDD 1417. The word is not recorded in early Çağ. dicts. but P. de C. somewhere found a word uluğ 'arrow-shaft' which he entered twice, one starting alif-lām, etc. (p. 35) and once alif wāw lām, etc. (p. 80); these entries were much distorted in R I 388, 1852 and ŞS. Uyğ. VIII ff. Bud. yılızların ulunların butikların yapırğakların 'the roots, shoots, branches, and leaves' (of various flowering and fruit trees) Suv. 529, 7-9: Xak. xi ulun qidhu'l-nibāl 'the shaft of an arrow' Kaş. I 78.

D öleğ Dev. N. fr. öli:-; 'grass', esp. 'fresh growing grass'; hence, by extension 'a grassy meadow'. S.i.a.m.l.g.; in SW only Tkm. and xx Anat. There is, supposedly another öleğ meaning 'a wedding song' noted in San. 86r. 21 and surviving in NC Kir., Kzx., and SW Tkm., but this meaning prob. derives from the fact that the refrain (quoted in San. and Tkm.) is hay öleğ hay öleğ, which looks like a metaph. reference to the bride. See Doerfer II 620. Uyğ. VIII ff. Bud. bir kuruğ öleğde 'in a dry meadow' Suv. 599, 13: a.o. do. 31, 19: Çağ. xv ff. öleğ muşlağ sabzazār 'meadow' in general Vel. 112 (quoton.); öleğ (spelt) sabza wa sabzazār 'fresh vegetation, meadow' San. 86r. 19 (quoton.).

D alar- (al-a:r-) Intrans. Den. V. fr. a:la:; 'to become dappled or variegated, to change colour'. Survives w. some extended meanings in SE Türki Shaw 12: NC Kzx.; NW Kaz. and SW xx Anat. SDD 91. Cf. alart- Xak. XI talka: alardı: talawcana'l-hişrim wa gayruhu mina'l-timār 'the unripe (and other) fruit changed colour'; and one says kışi: yini: alardı: 'the man's body (etc.) became leprous' (barışa); and anıy kö:zil: alardı: 'his eyes were dazzled' (barıqa) Kaş. I 179 (al-a:rur (sic), alarma:k).

İler- acc. to Kaş. 'to be dimly visible'. Became a l-w. in Mong. as ilere- 'to appear, become clearly visible' (Kov. 300, Halted 67). NE Tel. İler- with the latter meaning, RI 1480, might be either a survival or a re-borrowing fr. Mong. Cf. İler-t-. Xak. XI meniñ kö:züme: ne:ñ ilerdi: taxayyala'l-şay fi 'ayni fi bu'd aw zulma 'the thing was dimly visible to my eyes in the distance or the dark'; (in verse) tağlar: başı: ilerdi: 'the heads of the mountains were dimly visible' Kaş. I 179 (no Aor. or Infin.); II 283, 3 (same verse).

olur- (?olor-) 'to sit', with various extended meanings. The phonetics of this word are complicated. The Caus. f. olğurt- q.v. suggests that the original form was olğur-, but there is no other trace of such a word. The only form in Uyg. and earlier languages is olur-, but this form survives only in NE Tuv.

olur- and Yakut olor- Pek. 1819. In Xak. there are two forms oldur- and oltur- which are best explained as very early examples of the Turkish habit of dissimilating -l- to -ld- (cf. the pronunciation alda for allah in some modern languages). The form oltur- still survives in some modern languages, but in others the -l- has been assimilated to -tt- (some NE languages), -d- (other NE languages) or -t- (all SW languages and some others). The verb originally meant 'to sit', possibly with a distinction of meaning between 'to sit down on (something Dat.)' and 'to be seated on (something Loc.)'. The special application to rulers seems to have been pec. to the early period. Another shade of meaning is (of nomads) 'to settle down, reside' (in a particular place); in some languages only of temporary settlement, permanent settlement being described by yat-. In some modern languages used as an Auxiliary Verb, preceded by a Ger. in -p, meaning 'to do (something) habitually, continuously, or frequently', but sometimes with a very tenuous meaning. Türkü VIII olur- is very common in three distinct meanings; (1) 'to sit down (for a rest)' I E 27, II E 22; T 51-2 (udı:-); (2) 'to take (one's) seat on the throne' xağan olurtım 'I took my seat as xağan' I S 9, II N 7; a.o. I S 8, II N 6 (1 é:1); (3) 'to settle down, take up residence' (temporarily, in a particular place Loc.) altu:n yışda: oluruñ 'settle down (for a time) in the Altay mountains' T 31 oluruñ téyen tedı 'he said, "stay where you are"', T 34; o.o. I S 4, etc.: VIII ff. a (bird) çıntan ıgaç üze: oluru:pan 'perching on a sandal-wood tree' İrkB 4; xan oluru:pan 'a Xan, taking his seat on the throne' (built himself a capital) do. 28; (a pail) küneşke: olu:rur: 'is sitting in the sunlight' do. 57; (a crane) uça: uma:tın olu:rur: 'sits still, because it cannot fly' do. 61; Man: (the king) altınuğ örgin üze olurdi 'took his seat on the golden throne' TT II 8, 68; similar phr. do. 74; baçak oluru:p 'while sitting fasting' Chuas. 257; similar phr. do. 273, 281: Uyg. VIII yüz yıl oluru:p 'sitting on the throne for a hundred years' Şu. N 3; o.o. do. N 2, 4; W. 3; E 10: VIII ff. Man.-A men anta oluru:yan 'I will sit there' MI 33, 5; a.o. do. 34, 9: Man. MI 11, 12-13 (tüttür-): Bud. Sanskrit shlito nişanno 'standing or sitting' turup olorup TT VIII B.16 (Sanskrit lost) birge:rü yıgıñ olororlar: erdi 'they gathered together and sat down' do. C.12; (of a monk) olurdaçı 'residing' (in a monastery) Hüen-ts. 1767; o.o. U II 26, 6 (İlınçü:le:-); PP 65, 1; 71, 2; TT V 8, 64; 12, 128; U III 28 13: Civ. olurur ev 'the house where I reside' ÜŞp. 55, 24; a.o. TT I 120 (yurt): XIV *Chin.-Uyg. D alış N.Ac. (connoting reciprocity) fr. al-; by itself, 'taking, receiving', and the like, but usually used in the phr. alış bęriş 'buying and selling, commerce'. S.i.a.m.l.g. See *Doerfer II 534, 539. Uyğ. VIII ff. Civ. alış seems to be a generic term for 'tax, levy'; (after a list of four specific taxes) neğü me alış biz tilemez biz 'we will not demand (the four taxes named or) any kind of levy' *Usp. 21, 13; bileki alış bęriş tıltağında 'concerning our joint trading operations' *do. bęriş 'give them whatever they want in the way of receipts and payments' 4421.

uluş has a curious history; originally it meant 'country' in a geographical sense, as opposed to I ęl: (q.v.) with its political implications, but it began to be associated with the names of cities, and by XI in some languages it meant 'city' rather than 'country'. An early l.-w. in Mong., where it became ulus to comply with Mong. phonetics and acquired a political rather than a geographical sense. It was originally used for the largest political unit known, the Mong. empire (see XIII below), and when this was split into four between the four sons of Činggis it was used for each of these four parts, e.g. 'the ulus of Čağatay'. Then, since the Mongols thought more in terms of peoples than of territories, it came to mean 'a confederation of peoples (ęl:)', the peoples being divided into 'tribes' (aymağ), the tribes into 'clans' (boy), and these into families (uruğ). All these words, except perhaps the third, were Turkish and the second, fourth, and fifth have a continuous history in Turkish, but the first had so completely lost its original meaning that when it was reintroduced into Turkish it appeared in its Mong. form ulus (not uluş) and with its Mong. meaning. Uluş seems to survive only in NW Kar. L. RI 1697; in all other language groups (except NC where it is obsolete) it is ulus 'nation, people, tribe', and the like. Türkü VIII (in the list of foreign powers represented at Kül Tęgin's funeral) Buxarak uluş 'the country of the Bokhariots' (prob. in Inner Mongolia, not Bokhara itself, see S. F amaç a very early l-w. fr. Pe., no doubt acquired with the plough, when the Turks first became agriculturalists. Persian âmâc meant primarily 'plough', thence 'a heap of earth thrown up by the plough', thence 'such a heap, perhaps further enlarged, used as an archery target', and thence 'a furlong, one twenty-fourth of a parasang', a suitable distance for an archery range. Kaş. noted two of these meanings, San., who recognized the word as Pe., gave only one Turkish meaning. It is listed in SE 'Türki amaç 'plough' Shaw 14; SC Sart ditto RI 646; Uzb. omoç 'plough' (obsolete) Bor. 304 and in SW Tkm. omaç 'plough' (obsolete). It existed in SW Osm. fr. an early period (see below), but Red. marked it as Pe. and so did Sam. 54, describing it as a 'superfluous' word for 'target'. It has, however, been adopted in Rep. Turkish meaning (physically) 'a target' and (metaph.) 'aim, objective' on the ground that it means 'target' in SW Anat. (amaç SDD 98; emeç do. 528). See Doerfer II 552; and cf. bokursi. Hak. XI amaç (zamac) al-hadaf 'target'; amaç al-faddân wa hiya âlatu'l-filâha 'plough', that is an agricultural implement Kaş. I 52; o.o. all meaning 'target', I 333, 8 (2 çak); II 329, 1 (kırçat-); III 107, 5 (yastal-); 276, 14 (kırça-): Çağ. xv ff. amaç (sic) 'an iron implement (âlat) which farmers fasten to the necks of oxen and use to plough the land'; in this meaning the word is shared (muştarak) with Pe.; and in Pe. it also means 'a mound of earth (xâki) on which they put an archery target, a king's throne, and one twenty-fourth of a parasang' San. 50v. 1: Xwar. XIV. omaç/omanç 'target' Qutb 198: Kıp. XIV amaç al-ğaradu'l-mutaqârib (?read mutağârad) 'a target which is near' (?aimed at') İd. 23: xv marmâ 'target' omac (sic) Tuh. 33b. 13: Osm. XIV ff. amac, often spelt omac c.i.a.p. TTS I 24, 542; II 31, 728; III 543; IV 20.

E amaç one of the few serious scribal errors in Kaş. In I 140, 7, after translating armağan ('gift') and saying that there is an alternative form yarmağan, wa huwa amuc is added. This has been taken to mean that this was another word for 'gift', but it is merely a miscopying of wa huwa aşahh 'and it is more correct'.

D emçi: N.Ag. fr. em; 'physician'. Survives in much the same languages as em, sometimes meaning specifically 'quack doctor'. See Doerfer II 667. Uyg. VIII ff. Chr. U I 7, 3 (2 ot); *Xak. D umuğ Dev. N. fr. um-; in the early period it must have meant 'an object of desire', and the phr. umuğ inağ, in which it nearly always occurs 'something, or some one, desired and trusted'. When um- came to mean 'to hope', it followed suit, and umu 'hope, expectation' survived in the XIX SW Osm. dict., but is now obsolete and displaced, usually by Pe. umid; SW xx Anat. umu still means 'request' SDD 14,18. Uyg. VIII ff. 1 imğa: 'wild mountain goat'; an old word w. ending -ğa: The spelling in Türkü seems to be amğa, since Runic mğ a: could hardly be read imğa:. Became an early l.-w. in Mong. as imağa(n)/ima'a(n) 'male (wild) goat' (Kov. 309, Haltod 69); Mong. Plur. ima'at in XIII Secret History (Haensch 82). On this word see Studies, p. 235 and also Scherbak 118 and L. Bazin, 'Noms de la "chèvre" en turc et en mongol', in Studia Altaica, Festschrift für Nikolaus Poppe, Wiesbaden, 1957, pp. 28 ff., both of which contain minor errors, e.g. that the word originally had an initial y-which rests on no better evidence than a mis-spelling in the Vienna MS. of the KB. Survives apparently only in SW xx Anat. ima/ime SDD 789, 790, both of which seem to mean some kind of wild goat. Türkü VIII passages in I N 8 and II E 31 have hitherto been read Amğa: Kurğan kışlap and Amğü: (error for Amğa:, the stone is chipped here) Kurğan kışladukda: 'after spending the winter at Amğa Kurğan'. This is open to two objections: (1) in the only other early (Uyg. VIII) occurrence of kışla- it is preceded by the Instr., Ötüken irin kışladım 'I spent the winter north of the Ötüken' Şu. E 7; (2) kurğan, 'fort' and the like, is not noted earlier than Kıp. XIII and Çağ. xv ff. The correct reading is prob. amğa: korıgün 'at the hunting ground for wild goats reserved for the xağan' (see korıg) prob. used as a place-name: VIII ff. (a leopard and a stag went searching for game and grain) ortu: yérde: amğaka: sokuşmı:s esri: amğa: yalım kaya:ka: ünüp barmı:ş 'in the middle country they met a wild goat; the dappled wild goat climbed a bare rock and made off' İrkB 49 (for kaya: cf. KB): Xak. XI KB kayada yoriğli bu imğa teke 'these mountain goats and ibexes ranging among the rocks' (cannot escape you) 5373; xiv Muh. kabıslı-cabal 'wild mountain goat': imğa: Mel. 72, 10; Rif. 175 (mis-spelt, nün for yā): Çağ. xv ff. imğa: (spelt) buz-i kiñti 'mountain goat' San. 114v. 29; (yaman . . . and, in Mong., buz 337v. 4); Osm. XIV to XVI ime (or? ima) 'mountain goat'; in several texts TTS I 337; II 532; III 368; IV 421.

2 imğa: the title of a Turkish official; in Turkish n.o.a.b., but basically identical with a title included in the lists of Türkü officials in the Sui Shu and two T'ang Shu's (see Chavannes, Documents sur les Tou-hioue (Turcs) Occidentaux, p. 376; Liu Mau-tsai Die chinesische Nachrichten zur Geschichte der Ost-Türken, p. 824) in the form yen-hung-to (Giles 13,153 5,252 10,473) representing in Karlgren's 'Ancient Chinese' tüm yung d'ät, and probably pronounced in the T'ang period as something like im go dar, which might represent imğa:la:r. Xak. XI imğa: al-xāzin li'l-anzāl wa'l-qayyim 'alā cam'ihā 'the treasurer in charge of (public) moneys and the superintendent over their collection' Kağ. I 128; (in a section headed fa'allā muskana-tū'l-lāmi'l-ülā wa mimnā kusirat fā'uhū) C élümğa: (i.e. I él: imğa:) al-kātibū'ludāi yaktub marāsila'l-witān bi-xatī'l-turkiya 'the secretary who writes the Sultan's letters in Turkish (i.e. Uygür) script' I 143; KB Chap. 34 (2672 ff.) relates to the duties of the bitiğçi élümğa: but only the bitiğçi is mentioned in the text; in a long list of officials in 4064 ff. the él imğa: comes after the sü başı 'army commander' and hācib 'chancellor' and before the öge: 'counsellor' and the kök ayuk 'village headman' (q.v.).

uma:y originally 'placenta, afterbirth'; also used as the name of the (only?) Turkish goddess, whose particular function was to look after women and children, possibly because this object was supposed to have magic qualities. Survives, more or less in the second meaning, in NE Şor umay R I 1788; Khak. ımay (sic) and NC Kır. umay; the last also means 'a mythical bird that builds its nest in the air', but this is merely a corruption of Persian humāy. Türkü VIII (my younger brother grew to manhood) umay teg öğüm katu:n kutı:ğa: 'under the auspices of my mother who is like (the goddess) Umay' I E 31; a.o. T 38 (basa):— Köğmen [...] ıduk yer suv [...] kan teprı:d[ə] [...] umay xatu:n Inscription on a tile found near Ulan Bator ETY II 161: VIII ff. Yep. in Mal. 28, a jumble of two separate inscriptions, one seems to begin at l. 3 bu atımız Umay beg atım, but Umay Beg is an unlikely name for a man: Uyğ. VIII ff. Civ. two parties to a contract described themselves as Balığ Umay ikigü 'Balığ and Umay, the two of us together' USp. 5, 1 and 6; umay kéc tüşser 'if the placenta is slow in coming away' TT VII 27, 16: Xak. XI ıma:y 'a thing like a small container (ka'l-huqqa) which comes out a woman's womb after a birth; it is said that it is the child's comrade (şahıbu'l-walad) in the womb'. (Prov.) ıma:yka: tapınsa: oğul bulu:r 'if one worships the placenta (or Umay?) one gets a son'; the women take omens (yatafa'-alna) with it Kaş. I 123: Kıp. xv xalāş (al-mar'a inserted above) umay Tuħ. 14a. 9 (xalāş means 'salvation', which is quite inappropriate, and also 'end'; the addition 'of a woman' suggests that 'placenta' was intended).

Dis. AMZ

VU ümzük Hap. leg.; hardly to be connected with SW xx Anat. ümzük 'short pieces of thread' SDD 1431. The difference between the meanings of this word and yalığ is obscure. Xak. XI ümzük taraf hanwı'l-sarc muqaddam wa mu'axxar 'the extremity of a saddle-bow in front and behind' Kaş. I 105.

Dis. V. AMZ-

D emüz- Caus. f. of em-; 'to cause to suck'. This is the oldest form; emğiz-, prob. a Sec. f. of it, is first noted in Muh. and survives in one or two modern languages, and emzür-, prob. a Caus. f. of it, is also noted in Muh. and was the standard form in Kıp. (Hou. 36, 13; İd. 23; Kav. 69, 15). Emiz- s.i.a.m.l.g., sometimes perhaps for emğiz-, except in SW Az. emizdir-; Osm. emzir-; Tkm. emdir-. Xak. XI ura:ğut oğı:ğa: sü:t emüzdi: arda'atı'l-mar'atı'l-laban li'bnihā 'the woman suckled her child (with milk)' Kaş. I 180 (emüzür, emüzme:k); a.o. III 264, 11: XIII(?) Tef. emüz- 'to put out (a child) to nurse' 77; XIV Muh. amaşşā 'to cause to suck' emğiz- (sic) Mel. 41, 11; emiz- Rif. 132; (arda'a'l-walad emzür- 22, 5; emzür- 102); Çağ. xv ff. emiz- (spelt) Caus. f. of em-; makānıdan wa şır dādan 'to suckle, give milk' San. 113v. 5; (emizdir- Caus. f. of emiz-, şır dıhānıdan do. 113v. 17).

Mon. AN

Preliminary note. Apart from m there were three nasal sounds in early Turkish: dental n, which has survived in all languages, guttural ŋ, which has survived in some languages, been weakened to n in others and in a few, under the influence of Mong. (see Studies, p. 220), strengthened to ŋğ, ŋk, and palatal ñ, which was already becoming obsolete in VIII and has now evolved into y, n or a combination of the two, usually metathesized, see Clauson, 'The Turkish y and Related Sounds' in Studia Altaica, Festschrift für Nikolaus Poppe, Wiesbaden, 1957. There is some difficulty in texts in Ar. script in distinguishing between ŋ and ŋğ, but the latter combination seems to occur only when -ğ- is the first letter of a suffix, and in Kaş. words containing ŋ are placed in special sections for words containing that sound. Some authorities, e.g. İd., tried to overcome the difficulty by representing ŋ by n with a diacritical mark, usually three subscribed dots, but this mark is often lacking in the surviving MSS.; in others ğ sometimes seems to be used to represent ŋ.

D an- stem for the oblique cases of ol, q.v.

I ağ 'understanding, intelligence'. The earliest note of this word is in San., but as it is the basis of ağla- it must be much older. S.i.a.m.l.g. except NE and ?SC. See Doerfer II 565. Çağ. xv ff. ağ (spelt) aql-u fahm 'intelligence, understanding' San. 52r. 2: Kıp. XIV see ağla-.

VU 2 ağ Hap. leg.; possibly a Chinese l.-w. Xak. XI ağ ism tā'ir yutadawā bi-şahmihī 'the name of a bird whose fat is used for medicinal purposes', if it is rubbed on the palm of the hand it penetrates to the other side Kaş. I 40.

VU 3 ağ Hap. leg.; cf. 2 u. Oğuz XI ağ an exclamation (harf) meaning 'no' (lā); when a man is given an order he says ağ ağ 'no no', Kaş. I 40.

S? 4 ağ See 3 eğ.

E? 5 ağ See 1 eğ.

I én 'breadth', as opposed to length. S.i.a.m.l.g. in forms which clearly point to an original é-. Xak. XI én 'the breadth' (al-ard) of anything; hence one says bu: böz: éni: neçe: 'what is the breadth of this cloth?' Kaş. I 49; a.o. I 349 (turk): KB 138 (evliç): XIII(?) Tef. én 'breadth' 77: XV Rbğ. ditto R I 726 (quotn.); Muh.(?) ardul-fawb 'the breadth of a garment' (to'n é:ni: Rif. 167 only): Çağ. xv ff. én ('with é-') ard-u pahnā 'breadth' San. 117v. 17: Kıp. XIV én (erroneously marked 'with back vowel'; v.l. en) al-ard daddu'l-fawl 'breadth', opposite to length İd. 23: xv arid 'broad' (yaşşı and) enşen Tuħ. 25a. 4.

2 én 'sloping downwards'; pec. to Xak.; homophonous w. én-. Xak. XI é:n yé:r al-habūt mina'l-ard 'downward sloping ground' hence one says ém yok habta wa şa'üd 'up and down country' Kaş. I 49; a.o. III 4, 12 (yī:ş).

3 éñ 'earmark' on sheep or other animals; not noted before xiv but the Dev. V. éne:- is older. Survives in NE Khak. Bas. 59; NC Kır., Kzx., and SW xx Anat. en, in, in SDD 531, 770, 791. Kıp. xiv (after 1 éñ) also used şarat udni'l-ğanam 'an earmark on sheep' Id. 23 (156).

1 eñ an Adjectival Prefix forming a quasi-Superlative. S.i.a.m.l.g. as eñ occasionally ép. In spite of the fairly consistent spelling eñ in Üyg., which is contradicted by eñ in TT VIII, there is no reasonable doubt that this was always eñ. See Doerfer II 566. Türkü viii eñ ilk I N 4; eñ ilki: I E 32; I E 30 'first of all' (adverbially); Üyg. viii ff. Man. -A eñ ilki ditto M I 14, 6: Bud. Sanskrit antima- 'last of all' (Adj.) eñ kénki TT VIII A.48; añ (sic) ilki TT V 20, 2; añ başlayuki tultağ 'its primary cause' do. 20, 3 and 7; añ başı do. 20, 10; 24, 55; añ başlayu Suv. 348, 6; añ túbünde 'finally' TT VII 40, 143; Civ. eñ ögre 'first' (Adv.) TT VIII L.33; añ ilki TT VII 14, 4; H I 14: Xak. xı KB bularda eñ altın 'the lowest of these' 137, 793 (aşnu:kr); 3997: Kom. xiv eñ (before labials em) CCI, CCG; Gr. 89 (quotns.).

2 eñ survives only in SW xix Osm. but even there described in Sam. I 43 as 'obsolete'. Most authorities translate 'check', but as it is often associated with colours, 'complexion', the Osm. meaning, may sometimes be intended; yapa:k, the alternative word for 'cheek' seems originally to have meant specifically 'cheek-bone'. Xak. xı eñ al-xadd 'cheek'; one says kızıl eñ 'red cheeks' Kaş. I 40: KB sarığ kulğa 'eñ it will make my cheeks yellow' 477; o.o. (see kız-) 1100, 2385: xiii(?) At. (the prophets have white faces, Muhammad is the eye in the face) yā olar kızıl eñ bu epke meñ-e 'or they (have) red cheeks, and he is the mole on the cheek' 26: xiv Muh.(?) al-xadd eñ (followed by al-ārid 'cheek-bone' yapa:k) Rif. 140 (only): Çağ. xv ff. eñ yayak Vel. 31 (quotn.); ép ditto 84 (quotn.); ép gūno wa ārid 'complexion, cheek' San. 117v. 28 (quotns.): Xwar. xiv eñ 'cheek' Qutb 21; ép do. 50; MN 6, etc.: Kıp. xiv eñ ('with -y) yulqaq 'alā-l-xadd 'is used with reference to the cheek' Id. 25; (under buğday) em lawnu'l-xadd 'the colour of the cheeks' do. 34.

3 eñ with a front vowel occurs only in Irkb, where it might mean 'wild game' (but for this av might be expected) or, more generally, 'food' (usually a:ş). Its relationship to Mong. añ 'wild game' (Kov. 15, Haltod 2) is obscure, but since the Mongols must have had their own word for 'wild game' the resemblance is prob. fortuitous. Añ 'wild game' in most NE languages R I 182, Khak., Tuv., and NC Kır., is no doubt a Mong. l.-w. Türkü viii ff. bars keyi:k epke: meñke: barmi:ş epin meñ:n bulmi:ş 'a leopard and a deer went to look for game (or food?) and grain and found it' Irkb 31 (cf. eple:-).

S.i.a.m.l.g. Türkü viii ff. (I am a golden-headed snake; cut my belly with a sword and) özüm yul intin başım:un yul evrıntın 'pull me out of the hole and my head out of the berries(?)' Irkb 8: Xak. xı in 'the den ('arin) of a lion, the hole (tuwär) of a snake and the lair (ma'wā) of any predatory animal'; also pronounced yī:n Kaş. I 49; yīn 'a lion's den', hence one says arslan:un yīni:; also 'the hole' of a snake, and 'the lair' of any predatory animal with fangs or tusks (dū nāb) is called yīn III 5 (prov. with Dat. yinke:, verse with Dat. yinka: in error): Çağ. xv ff. in (by implication 'with i-') sūrāx wa xāna cānwārān 'hole, or abode, of wild beasts' San. 117v. 4 (quotns.): Xwar. xiv in 'hole' Qutb 50: Kom. xiv ditto CCG; Gr.: Kıp. al-mağāra 'a cave' in Hou. 5, 18: xiv (after 1 éñ) also applied (yanlağ) in Kıp. to al-wahr wa'l-wicār 'the nest or hole' of a wild animal or the abodes (buyūt) of reptiles; hence yılan inidür 'it is the hole (cıhr) of a snake' Id. 23; al-wahr in Bul. 3, 16; xv cıhr in Tuh. 10a. 10: Osm. xv in 'hole, hiding place' (for a man) in one text TTS I 379.

1 oñ like 1 sa:ğ q.v. and, in English, 'right', the opposite both of 'left' and of 'wrong'. Both meanings seem equally old. Except in scripts which carefully distinguish between o- and ö- easily confused with 1 öñ, particularly in regard to the cardinal points, since for someone facing East öñtün is 'East' and for someone facing South oñtun is 'West'. 1 öñ 'the front' of anything; in the early period used mainly in oblique cases of which two, öñdün and öñre: are listed separately; the form öñü, q.v., may be a crasis of öñkü; N.A.S. in -kü: (-kl). Survives only(?) in SW Az., Osm., Tkm. Türkü VIII ff. Man. (if they go to heaven) öñü kapığı kün ay tēri ol 'its front gate is the sun and moon gods' Chuas. 7-8: Civ. özüñ öñ iş başlağl 'begin the work which confronts you' TT I 150; in Usp. 5, 3 (üçün); 48, 3; 112, 7 which are all receipts given to replace previous receipts, the original, lost, document is called öñ bitlig 'previous(?) document': Xak. XI öñ al-quddām 'the front'; one says öl menden öñdün bardı: 'he went in front of me' (quddām) Kaş. I 40: XII(?) KBVP (they read this book) malıknıñ öñünde 'in the presence of the king' 60: *XIII(?) 2 öñ 'colour', of anything. Since Chinese şē (Giles 9,602), properly 'colour', is also used to translate Sanskrit rūpa 'material form', in some Man. and Bud. texts öñ is used in the same technical sense, instead of the natural translation of this word, körk, q.v. Survives only in some NE languages and NC Kir., Kzx.; in these languages it tends to mean 'the complexion of the face' and even 'the face', which leads to confusion with 2 eñ and even 1 öñ. Türkü VIII ff. Man. (the five gods are the majesty) öñl meñzi 'the material form (Hend.)' (the self, soul, strength, light, and root of everything on earth) Chuas. 46: Uyg. VIII ff. Bud. bês törlüg yaruk öñ 'five kinds of bright colours' TT V 12, 133—at öñ translates Sanskrit nāmarūpa 'identity and material form' U II 12, 19, etc.; öñ körk rūpa TT VI 151, etc.; Suv. 164, 20: Xak. XI öñ 'the colour' (lawın) of anything; hence one says ya:şıl öñlüğ to:n 'a green (axdar) coloured garment' Kaş. I 41.

VU 3 öñ (?üñ) 'desolate, uninhabited, desert'. A rare word, n.o.a.b., first identified by Bang in Turcica (M.V.A.G. 1917) p. 286. The synonymous word e:n in most NE languages R I 729; Khak. Bas. 334; Tuv. Pal. 591 and NC Kir. is phonetically so remote that it is hard to connect with this word. Türkü VIII ff. özülük at öñ yérde: arıp oñu:p turu: kal-mi:ş 'a well-bred horse came to a standstill in a desert exhausted and wilting' Irkb 17: Uyg. VIII ff. añ- 'to remember, call to mind'. Unless añmın q.v. is an error, not noted before XIII(?) but prob. an older word. *San.*s translation 'to understand' is prob. due to confusion with 1 añ and not evidence for an earlier connection between the two words. on-, etc. Preliminary note. Kaş. lists three verbs of this form oñ- 'to fade', ün- 'to rise', and ün- 'to hollow out', but not on- 'to prosper' which was well established at an earlier date, and still survives, though in most languages as oñ-. Two more verbs appeared in the medieval period, ün- 'to be stubborn' and öñ- 'to lie in wait'. It is not always easy in texts to decide which verb is intended and sometimes whether words like oñar and onu are conjugal forms of one of these verbs or a longer verb like oñar- or a Pronoun (see D onu).

on- 'to thrive, prosper'. Certainly so spelt in the early period, but became oñ- in the medieval period, possibly by false analogy with 1 oñ, oñar-, etc., and s.i.a.m.l.g. with these and some extended meanings, usually as oñ-. Uyg. VIII ff. Man.-A. ol tişı takığular

VU ün- 'to rise', while still maintaining contact with the point of departure, e.g. (of a plant) 'to sprout', (of a man) 'to stand up', as opposed to 1 ağ- 'to ascend, climb', from one point to another. Dis. ANA ana: 'mother'. Like ata; q.v., first appears in Uyg., where it is still rare and 1 öğ, q.v., still common. C.i.a.m.l.g., except NE where it has been partially displaced by Mong. eečice; sometimes subjected to unusual deformations, e.g. anne, to make it a term of more intimate affection. ini: 'younger brother'. C.i.a.p.a.l., but in SW Osm. largely displaced by such phr. as küçük kardeş. Cf. écl.: See Doerfler II 674. Türkü vIII inim and inisi: are common in I and II; a collective Plur. in -gün occurs three times; in I S 1 the spelling is clearly inygünm, in II N 1 the stone seems to be damaged beyond repair at this point, and Radloff's 'retouched' squeeze simply reproduces the word fr. I S 1; in II N 11 the third letter is not clear in either Russian squeeze or Finnish photograph, but it is clearly not y and could well be i; the -y in I S 1 can, therefore, be taken as one of several mason's errors and the word read everywhere, as might be expected, inlgün:nim 'my younger brothers': *vIII ff. VU ona: an Adv., pec. to Uyg. and discussed at length in TT V, p. 32, note B 80. It seems to mean both (1) 'precisely, exactly' and (2) 'very soon'. It seems to be the origin of a modern word ana (with other forms ene, anav) used as an Excl. meaning 'here, here you are', and an Adv. meaning 'merely, simply' which occurs in some NE and NW languages, NC Kzx., and in a wide range of forms in SW xx Anat. SDD 99, 100, 101, 104, 532, 534, 537, 791, 793. The Kzx. phr. ana mina suggests a connection with ol and v. G. ATG, para. 190 adopts this suggestion, but the oblique stem of ol is consistently an- (with some traces of in-) in Uyg. Cf. onu: Uyg. vIII ff. Bud. Ratnaraşı atlığ açarı ona amtı bu erür 'now this is the teacher named Ratnaraşı' Suv. 573, 20-1; Brahmadattı éligñliş [körünçlüki] ona iraktın közüñü turur 'King Brahmadattas' tate chariot(?) is just appearing in the distance' U II 22, 5-6; men ona basa yitdim 'I have certainly gone astray' Suv. 615, 14-15; ona at the beginning of a long sentence TT V 24, 80; (for the second meaning see onakaya).

D o:nu: pec. to Xak.(?); apparently the Acc. of ol used as a sort of Excl., but irregular since the oblique stem of ol in Xak. is an-. Possibly a later form of ona: q.v. Xak. xI one says o:nu: meaning daka 'that' and mu:nu: meaning hâdâ 'this' fi'l-işâra ilâ'l-ayn mina'l-a-yân 'to distinguish one thing from another' Kaş. III 238: KB onu and munu occur several times as rhymes at the end of consecutive hemistichs but add little or nothing to the meaning; ayur emdi oğlum barırmen munu sağa kaldı ornum barı ney onu 'he said "now, my son, I am going away (from here); my position and all my goods remain (there) for you"' 1161; sözün kesti Ögdülmiş aydı munu bu yapığ bolur beg tapuğçı onu 'Ögdülmiş finished his speech and said (this) "the (relations between the) beg and the servant are like this" (there)' 4155.

öpl: 'other than (something Ahl.) different'; when doubled, öpl: öpl:, means 'various, different kinds of'; Kaş. quotes an alternative form öpln, no doubt Secondary, which appears in some medieval texts, and was the origin of öğün/öğün, q.v. Survives, with minor phonetic variations in most modern language groups, not SW, in SE, SC meaning 'variegated, parti-coloured', perhaps owing to a supposed connection with 2 öp. Cf. ađın, ađruk, özge: Türkü vIII ff. (how shall I get on) iđışimte: ayakımta: öpl: 'without my cup and bowl?' İrkB 42: Man. (if we have said) kenü özümüzün (sic) künte ayda öpl biz 'we ourselves are independent (of) the sun and moon' Chuas. 26-7; antın öpl bolğay 'it will be different from that' TT II 6, 25: Uyg. *vIII ff. D ança: Equative form of ol; properly 'as much as that', but normally in the early period hardly more than 'thus'. There is also, in the early period, a Sec. f. beginning with t- of this and other cognate words (ançıp, ançaru, etc.). This is usually transcribed inçe, a spelling which does occur in TT VIII, but as there is also a spelling inça in those texts, and as the word survives in this form in NE Tuv., it is likely that the original form was inça; and that inçe is merely one of several examples of the tendency of t- to move into a front position (cf. iş, ı tış, etc.). S.i.a.m.l.g. as ança and the like. As inça: always means 'thus', some editors of early texts have tended to 'correct' words meaning 'thus' to inçe even when ança: is clearly written. See Doerfer II 560. Türkü VIII ança: 'thus' is common in I and II and occurs in T 2, 6, 8, 10 (ö:ğle-), etc.; Ongin 8, 11; X. 20, 23; it is generally used near the end of a sentence or para. to summarize briefly what has gone before or, less often, what follows, e.g. anı: köriip ança: billiğ 'when you see it (the memorial tablet) know thus' (i.e. what has been said in the preceding sentences) IS 13: VIII ff. the concluding sentence of each para. in Irkb begins ança: billiğ (or bill:ğler) 'know thus' (i.e. as follows, the omen is good or bad); ança: temi:ş 'this is what he said' Toyok III 2r. 4, 10; v 2 (ETY II 179): Man. neçe yügürür ertli ança kusar yarsiyor ertli 'the more he ran the more he vomited (Hend.)' M I 7, 12-13; inça (sic) sakıntı 'thus he thought' (i.e. as follows) do. 5, 1: Uyg. VIII ff. Man.-A inça kaltı 'just as' . . . taki yeme ançulayu kaltı 'and also just as' . . . inça belğürtti 'thus he explained' M I 7, 2-8, 18: Man. inça kaltı Wind. 22: Chr. D aççı: N.Ag. fr. 4 aç (3 ep) 'hunter'. Rare in Uyğ., but clearly so spelt. A l.-w. in Mong. as açı (Kow. 18, also açıçı; Haltod 4). It is not clear whether the same word in some NE languages and NC Kir., Kzx. is a survival or a borrowing fr. Mong. Uyğ. viii ff. Bud. keyikçi aççı tuzakçı boltumuz erser 'if we have been hunters of stags and wild game or trappers' U II 84, 9-10; TT IV 8, 56-7.

?F ançu: n.o.a.b., but cf. ançula:-; used only in the Hend. ögdür ançu which seems to mean 'gift' or 'reward'. In U III 92, in a note on 32, 16 it is suggested that it is the Chinese phr. an chu 'to live in peace' (Giles 44 2,527); the semantic connection is not convincing, but the word is prob. a Chinese l.-w. Uyğ. viii ff. Bud. alı yarlıkazın teprî baxşı nomlamış nom etiriniñ ögdürin ançusın 'may the sacred preacher deign to receive a reward (or gift in return?) for the precious doctrine which he has preached' U III 32, 14-16; (go and kill the six-tusked elephant; if you do this) saña uluğ törlüñ ögdür ançu bar 'there are various great rewards (or gifts?) for you' do. 56, 8-10.

I inçü: n.o.a.b.; poorly attested in the early period, but the only occurrences being in Uyğ. Civ. documents of which one certainly, and the other two probably, date from the Mong. period. There is, however, no good reason for supposing that this is a l.-w. The only early (XIII) Mong. word of comparable form is ince 'a maid-servant given to a bride at her marriage' (Haenisch 83, there connected with Chinese ying, same meaning (Giles 13,343)) which is no doubt the original form of inci 'dowry' (Kow. 280, Haltod 62). This latter is a Mong. l.-w. in various NE languages and NC Kir., Kzx. There is no real semantic connection between these Mong. words and inçü: which at any rate in the medieval period had much the same meaning as English 'fief', that is 'a piece of land granted by a ruler on condition of the performance of certain services', and, by extension, 'the person(s) bound to perform such services'. Whether this was the original meaning it is hard to say. It has been plausibly suggested that this is the word which appears in the Staël-Holstein scroll, a Khotanese Saka document dated A.D. 925, in the forms 'ijüta and 'injü, meaning apparently 'the chief tribe in a confederation', that is the ruler's own tribe (see Asia Major, n.s., vol. II (1951), p. 17; vol. IV (1954), pp. 90 ff.). The original meaning may have been nearer to 'family or clan property', and in particular 'a chief's own property'. See Doerfer II 670. Uyğ. viii ff. Civ. (two land-owners too old to work say) urluk inçüderin inçü borlukka edlegüci bir erkliñ kişi bürsün 'let them give a responsible person from the family properties(?) to the family (?) vineyard to cultivate it' USp. 21, 3-4; in USp. 22 (mid-xiv) inçü bağıcı 'a worker in the family(?) vineyards' occurs 10 times; inçü kılıkı bile inçü borlukçı kezikte barça barsun 'in accordance with the custom of the family estates(?) let all the vineyard workers on the family estates(?) go in turn' do. 25, 5-7: Çağ. xv ff. inçü 'a vassal (tapu adamı) who goes voluntarily to a beg, enters his service and works for him' Vel. 82 (quotn.); inçü (spelt) ((1) 'pearl'; (2) mamlük 'servant, slave'; (3) amlak wa raqbât-i xâşşa-i diwâni 'private lands and slaves belonging to the government' San. 117 v. 15; Xwar. XIII inçil 'inheritance' Ali 47: Kıp. xv in a Golden Horde letter dated A.D. 1428 (they went off) öz ellerin ala 'retaining (only) their own realms', with ellerin glossed inçü 'fiefs' A. D aqla:- Den. V. fr. 1 aq; 'to understand' with the same shades of meaning as the English word. The normal early word for 'to understand' was uk-, and aqla:- was very rare, which perhaps explains why Kaş. thought it was specifically Oğuz. S.i.a.m.l.g. often much distorted, e.g. NE oğna-, etc. (Türkü VIII the word aqlar read at the end of T 34 (see añğ) in Radlov's edition is a figment, the photograph in Aalto's edition shows no sign of it): Uyg. VIII ff. ?E iñle- Hap. leg.; Pelliot read this word in the text below and translated it 'to bend', connecting it with 2 ep- (eg-) which is morphologically impossible; it is no doubt a mis-transcription of Irkle:- q.v. Uyg. VIII ff. Bud. (then the bull came out at the head of the herd; he made the prince lie down flat and) tört adakın iñleyü (read Irkleüyü) kölitdi turdı 'bending (substitute 'stamping with') his four legs stood shading him' PP 65, 5-6.

I er- 'to be' (something, somewhere, etc.), necessarily accompanied by a Predicate; it cannot be used by itself to mean 'to exist' (for which see bar), but is often used as an Aux. V. after Participles, etc. of other verbs. In the earliest period it was conjugated completely, but the -r- began to be elided fairly early, and after that the tenses formed by attaching suffixes with initial vowels became obsolete and were replaced by the corresponding tenses of bol-/ol- in some languages and I tur- in others. However, some tenses, usually without the -r-, s.i.a.m.l.g. The unusual very early Gerunds(?) erki, erken, erinç are listed separately. Türkü VIII; VIII ff including Man. and Yen. er-, 'to be', and as Aux. V., is very common: *Uyğ. VIII; VIII ff. 2 ēr- 'to reach, arrive; to meet(?)'. This verb is well established in several medieval languages and survives in SW Osm., but in the early period is so overshadowed by 1 er- that it is difficult to identify, particularly since its Perf. can hardly be distinguished from that of ert-. In the early period there is a phr. er-bar- which seems to mean 'to behave in an independent, insubordinate fashion', and can hardly be an idiom of 1 er-. In this sense it may be the basis of erk, q.v.; the same meaning seems to survive in NW Nog. erüv (a Nog. ur- distinguishable from o:r- by its short vowel and Aor. uru:r; c.i.a.p.a.l. From the earliest period it had two distinct meanings linked by the fact that both involve use of the arms; (1) 'to put (something Acc., on something Dat. or Loc.)'; (2) 'to strike (someone or something Acc.)', from which, esp. the first, a wide range of idiomatic meanings has developed. Those scholars who have tried to discriminate between these two meanings (e.g. Prof. Pelliot) by spelling (1) or- and (2) ur- were unquestionably mistaken. Türkü VIII yelme: karğu: edğü:ti: urğil 'set up a proper (system of) reconnoitring patrols and watch towers' T 34; a.o. I S 10-11, II N 8 (ölsik) — yarık:nta: yalması:nta: yüz artuk okun: urti: '(the enemy) hit him with more than a hundred arrows on his armour and quilted coat' I E 33; o.o. I E 36; Ix. 21: VIII ff. oyma: er oğlanı: n kisi:sl:n tutuğ uru:pan 'a gambler(?) putting up his children and wife as a stake' İrkB 29; kuğu: kuş kana:rtıya: uru:p 'putting (himself) on the swan's wings' do. 35; yañı:ıma:zu:n tēp bilgeğ urti: 'he set up a wise man telling him not to make mistakes' Tun. III a. 6-8 (ETY II 94) — kidli:ziğ suvka: sukmi:ş takı: ur katıgdi: ba: 'thrust the felt in the water and beat it, tie it firmly' İrkB 33; o.o. do. 35, 40: Man. diğim:n başıya urdı (the king) 'put his crown on his head' TT II 8, 67; nom törü ara: (?a:ra): difficult to pin down grammatically; there does not seem to be any record of it as the subject of a sentence or in other contexts in which it could be regarded as an ordinary Noun. In the early period it is used only as a Postposn. meaning 'between (two places), among (a number of people)', and the like; but Kař. translates it as a Noun and does not describe it as a harf. Later it seems to be used almost only in the Loc., either with a preceding Pron. Adj., e.g. bu arada 'in this locality', or with a Poss. SUFF. e.g. aramızda 'among us' or with a 3rd Pers. Poss. SUFF. and a preceding Noun, e.g. ořbu yurakun arasında 'in the middle of this light'. Normally used of space, less often of time. S.i.a.m.l.g. The spelling ara: in İrkB and TT VIII (SW Tkm. a:ra) is prob. the original one. Türkü viii (when the blue heaven was created above and the brown earth below, man was created) ekin ara: 'between the two' IE 1, E II 2; similar phr. IE 2, II E 4; Ongin 10; (then to the north of the Chinese) *Tag(?) VU arra (sic) Hap. leg.; onomatopoeic. Xak. xi arra al-bawł 'urine'; an Excl. (harf) addressed to a donkey to encourage it to urinate; it is repeated two or three times and (the donkey) urinates. This agrees (wāřaqat) with Ar. because al-arr means 'copulation' (al-cimā) in Ar. Kař. I 38.

arı: a large stinging insect, 'bee, wasp, hornet'. S.i.a.m.l.g. w. minor phonetic changes (ar, ara, etc.); in some the particular kind of insect is defined by an Attribute, e.g. Osm. bal arısı 'honey bee'. Xak. xi arı: al-zanbūr 'hornet, wasp', etc. This agrees (wāřaqat) with Ar. because al-ary means 'honey' (al-asał) in Ar., but in Turkish 'the source of honey' (mā yatawalladu'l-'asal minhu); and the Çigil Turks call 'honey' arı: yağ: samnu'l-nahl 'bee's oil' Kaş. I 87; o.o. II 329, 10 and 13; III 156 (ba:1); 276, 19: XIII(?) At. 'asal kayda erse bile arısı' 'wherever there is honey there is a bee with it', 439: xiv Muh. al-zanbūr arı: Mel. 74, 8; Rif. 177: Çağ. xv ff. arı (spelt) zanbūr San. 37v. 11 (quotns.): Xwar. xiv arı 'bee' Qutb 11; MN 10: Kıp. VU 2 urı: n.o.a.b.; IrKB 40 is a cryptic para. which continues 'he walks alone striking and cleaving precipitous rocks with a broad arrow-head'; nearly every word in it begins with y-, which may explain the curious use of words; this word obviously means 'ravine' or the like. Türkü VIII ff. talım (?error for telım) urı: yarinça: 'until he cleaves many ravines' IrKB 40: Oğuz XI (under teriğ q.v.) teriğ urı: al-faccu'l-'amiq 'a deep ravine' Kaş. III 370, 10; n.m.e.

F erej 'happiness, bliss'; corruption of Sogdian ryz (pronounced rěj), same meaning. In this spelling pec. to KB; for some unknown reason, perhaps confusion with irinç which has exactly the opposite meaning, it became corrupted to ërinç/ërinj, in which form it appears in Kaş. and sometimes in the Vienna MS. of KB. art (?*ar*d) originally 'the nape of the neck'; hence (1) a mountain pass or col (like the nape of the neck a depression between two elevations); (2) 'the back or hinder part of anything'. VU urt Hap. lcg.; Atalay points out that in SW xx Anat. (see SDD 783) 'the eye of a needle' is called igne yurdu; this might well be a corruption of this word, but this word cannot be a corruption of yurt, q.v., the meaning of which in Xak. would be quite inappropriate. There is another possible trace of this word; in SS 29 the translation of ört, etc. includes the words zehir, ağu 'poison'; this might be a misunderstanding of samm (see Kaş.'s translation) the normal meaning of which is 'poison'. Xak. XI urt sammu'l-xiyâf 'the eye of a needle' Kaş. I 42.

D ürpek N./A.S. fr. ürpe-; 'dishevelled, shaggy, bristling', and the like. Survives only

(?) in NC Kır., Kzx., and perhaps SW xx Anat. örpek 'a large mushroom' SDD 1116. Xak. xı ürpek (the -p- has three subscribed dots, possibly two of them added later) al-aş'at min'al-hayawân wa'l-nâs 'shaggy of beast or man' *Kaş. D arviş Dev. N. fr. arva-; 'a magic spell, or charm'; used to translate Sanskrit dhāraṇi. Became a l.-w. in Mong. a/arbis/arvis Kow. 157, 164 (translated 'knowledge, erudition') and survives only(?) in NE Tel. arbiş 'witchcraft, incantation' R I 338. Uyğ. viii ff. Man. M II 5, 9 (antağ); Bud. in TT VI 465 arviş nom bitig represents Sanskrit dhāraṇisūtra; the phr. dar(a)nı arviş occurs several times in TT V; in Pfahl. 8, 13 Arviş (mistranscribed Arviş) Teprim female Proper Name; o.o. TT VI 373-4 (nomçı); U II 58, 3 (ii); Xak. xı Kaş. PU İrbiş 'the Siberian panther, Felis irbis'. Became a l.-w. in Mong. as irbis (Kow. 324, Haltod 72) from which the word entered European zoological terminology and was re-borrowed in NE Leb., Tel. İrbis R I 1471. NE Tuv. İrbiş prob. preserves the original pronunciation, but it might have been İrpiş. All the early occurrences are in Uyğ. where the alphabet is so ambiguous that the final sound is not quite certain; it was certainly not -s and both -ç and -z are improbable. Uyğ. viii ff. Bud. İrbiş is included in lists of savage beasts with 'lion, leopard', etc. in TT VI 116; Sw. 331, 23; 599, 16; 610, 13; İrbiş kudruğı translates Chinese pao zwei 'panther's tail' (Giles 8,697 12,601), the name of a constellation TT VI 93; in U IV 44, 6 and 11 apparently spelt İrbic.

Dis. V. ARB-

arva- 'to make magic, cast spells'. Survives, generally as arba- in some NE languages; SE Türki; NC Kır., Kzx., and as avra- in SC Uzb. Xak. xı ka:m arviş (later misvocalized arvaş in the MS.) arvadı: raqā'l- kâhin ruqya 'the sorcerer cast a spell' Kaş. I 283 (arva:r, arva:ma:k); Çağ. xv ff. arba- afsün kardan 'to make magic' San. 34v. 23.

érpe- Hap. leg., but see érpēt-, érpel-. Xak. xı ol yığa:ç érpēdi: 'he sawed (naşara) the wood' (etc.); and one says of ı:şığ érpēdi: afsada'l-amr li-mā arāda işlahaku 'he spoilt the business in trying to improve it' Kaş. I 271 (érpe:r, érpe:me:k).

?D *ürpe- 'to be shaggy, dishevelled', and the like, is not actually noted but must be the basis of ürpek, ürpet-, ürpeş-; its relationship to the practically synonymous ürper- is obscure, but the likeliest explanation is that both are Den. V.s in -e- and -er- respectively fr. ürp. The modern forms ürpey- and the like which survive in NC Kır., Kzx. and NW Kar. T., Kk., and Nog. seem to go back to ürpe- rather than ürper-.

D érpēt- Hap. leg.; Caus. f. of érpe-. Xak. xı ol yığa:ç érpētti: 'he gave orders for the wood (etc.) to be sawn with a saw' (bi-naşri'l-xaşab wa ğayrihi bi'l minşâr) Kaş. I 260 (érpētür, érpētme:k).

D ürpet- Caus. f. of ürpe-; 'to make (the hair, etc.) dishevelled'. Survives as ürpeyt- and the like in the languages listed under ürpe-. Xak. xı er başın ürpetti: 'the man ruffled (sa'ata) his head (etc.)' Kaş. I 259 (ürpetür, ürpētme:k; MS in error -ma:k).

?D ürper- 'to bristle, stand on end', of hair, and the like; perhaps Intrans. Den. V. fr. ürp, cf. ürpe-. Survives only(?) in SW Az., Osm. Xak. xı er ürperdi: tanaffasa'l-racul wa'zba'arra mina'l-ğadab aw li'l-qitāl 'the man panted and bristled with anger or in a fight'; and one says taka:ğü: ürperdi: taqazza'a'l-dik li'l-qitāl 'the cock fluffed out its feathers for a fight'; and one says anıñ yini: ürperdi: iğsa'arra cilduhu 'his skin had gooseflesh' Kaş. I 217 (ürperür, ürperme:k); Osm. xviii ürper- (spelt) riyidan-i sabza 'of a plant, to sprout'; and metaph. râst şudan-i mü-yi andâm wa damidan-i xatt-i naw xattân 'of the hairs of the body to stand on end, and of a young beard, to sprout' San. 70v. 17.

D arvaş- Co-op. f. of arva-; 'to say spells together'. S.i.s.m.l. like arva-. Xak. xı ka:mlar kamuğ arvaşdı: haynamati'l-şahana bi-kalâm 'the sorcerers (all) mumbled (certain) words'; also used when they cast spells for ulcers (raqaw min sa'fa) and the like Kaş. I 236 (arvaşur, arvaşma:k).

D ürpeş- Co-op. f. of ürpe- survives only(?) in NC Kzx. Xak. xı eren ürpeşti: taşa'aba'l-abılâl wa'zba'arrü ğadaba(n) 'the warriors bristled (Hend.) with rage'; also used of other people Kaş. I 229 (ürpeşür, ürpeşme:k; verse).

I ert- normally Intrans., 'to pass' in all the usual meanings of that English word e.g. (of time) 'to pass'; (of an illness) 'to pass off'; (of physical movement) 'to pass' (from one place to another); occasionally Trans. 'to pass' (e.g. a place); in a few passages in Uyğ. Bud. it is a Trans. with 'sin' or the like as Object, and in this case seems to mean 'to commit persistently' (the conclusion in TT IV 14, note A.11 that this must be a different verb is improbable). Survives only(?) in most NE languages. Türkü yün (I mobilized the army of the On Ok; we, too, took the field and) anu: ert(t)imiz 'went past them' . . . VUD 2 ért- in Uyğ. viii ff. Bud. Hüen-tz. 1981 the Chinese phr. fa chiang (Giles 3,366 1,212) lit. 'dharma general' i.e. 'a monk of outstanding character' is translated nom ertgüsü 'leader(?) of the doctrine', chiang being taken as a verb 'to lead'. If this is so, ért- seems to be the Caus. f. of 2 ért- and presumably survives in NC Kzx. ért- 'to take (someone) with one, allow (him) to follow one' R I 790; MM 144.

ört- 'to cover, conceal (something Acc.'). Survives in NW Kaz. and SW Az., Osm., Tkm. Uyğ. viii ff. ordu, ortu: Preliminary note. This is one of the few cases in which two words semantically different are, at any rate in Türkü and Xak., differentiated phonetically only by the difference between -rd- and -rt-; in Uyğ., owing to the ambiguity of the script, only the context can decide which word is intended. The second is spelt orto in TT VIII, and the fact that in most modern languages both words now end in -a suggests that originally both ended in -o. It is prob. that the words, entered as 1 and 2 ordu, have a common origin, but as they had developed quite different meanings by XI they have been entered separately; -rd- is an unusual combination of sounds in Türkü and suggests that this is a l.-w., cf. 2 karşı.

1 ordu: (ordo:) originally 'a royal residence', that is 'palace' or 'royal camp' as the circumstances demanded; in the religious (Bud. and Man.) texts also 'a heavenly mansion'. An early l.-w. for 'palace, royal camp' as ordo in Mong. (Haenisch 125). Survives in NE Tuv. ordu; SE Türki orda Shaw 20, BŞ 761, Jar-ring 215 (with Sec. f.s.); NC Kır. ordo; Kzx. orda; SC Uzb. ürda; NW Kk., Nog. orda; SW Az., Osm. ordu, Tkm. orda. In SW Az., Osm. it came to mean 'a royal camp', thence any 'military camp' and finally, in military terminology, the largest type of military formation, 'army'. Elsewhere it retained its original meaning, but there are indications that in some languages it was reborrowed fr. Mong. See Doerfer II 452. Türkü VIII Oğuz yağı:

D artuk (?artok) Pass. N./A.S. fr. 2 art-; originally 'additional, an extra amount'; in the earliest texts used chiefly in numerical expressions; later usually 'a large additional amount', less often 'excess, excessive'. S.i.a.m.l.g. as artuk in SE and sometimes SC and artık elsewhere, with some extended meanings esp. in SW. The theory in TT V 33, note B. 71 that in a number of passages in Uyğ. D ortok (ortok) apparently Den. N. fr. ortu-; but the function of the Suffix, normally Diminutive, is obscure; 'partner'. Became ortak at a fairly early date (the MS. of Kaş. where the scribe tended to substitute the later form must have been written during the transitional period). S.i.a.m.l.g., ortok in NE Alt., Tel. R I 1071; NC Kir. and ortak elsewhere. See Doerfer II 446. Uyğ. VIII ff. Civ. ortuk seems to occur in two damaged and obscure texts; in USp. 55, 26-7 Memet Moğğol çin ötekçi bile ortuk altı şık yér might mean

'six şık of land held in common with Mehmed Moğğol the true debtor' (the last two words might be another Proper Name); in USp. 30, 7 ortaktı looks like a N./A.S. in -ktı 'situated in the middle', but ortuk in 30, 12 seems to be this word, meaning obscure: Xak. XI ortuk al-şarik 'a partner' *Kaş. D ertig Hap. leg.; Conc. N. fr. 1 ert-; lit. 'something over which one passes'. Xak. XI ertig al-tariqu'l-masliik 'a beaten track' Kaş. I 103.

ʔ D ördek a generic term for 'duck', particular varieties being distinguished by qualifying Adjs. or Nouns. Exceptionally Kaş. consistently translates ördek 'goose' and kaz 'duck', but this must be an error. Morphologically perhaps Dev. N. fr. 1 ör- (the bird) 'which rises' (from the water). The metaphorized form in Suv. (of which the MS. is XVIII) must be a Sec. f.; it survives as ödörek in NE Tuv. and the eccentric forms in Xwar. and Kip. may also go back to it. S.i.a.m.l.g., normally as ördek and the like. See Doerfer II 450. Uyğ. VIII ff. Bud. (oxen, sheep, swine) kaz ödrek takıgı 'geese, ducks, and poultry' Suv. 4, 12: xiv Chin.-Uyğ. Dict. 'duck' ördek Ligeti 190: Xak. XI ördek al-iwazz 'goose' *Kaş. D örtüg Conc. N. fr. ört-; originally 'covering' in general (Uyğ. Man. 'covered' may be the Pass. Dev. N./A. in -ük, 'covered' not otherwise recorded); in modern languages usually more specifically 'head-covering, veil'.

Survives in SE Tar. örtü: R I 1236; NC Kir. ürtük; SC Uzb. urtuk Bar. 480 (described as 'literary', 'mistranscribed'): SW Az., Osm. örtü; Tkm. örtük. Uyg. VIII ff. Man. ol yaruk örtük (?sic) sayu 'every time that light is obscured' (the mansion of the moon god) M III 7, 5 (v): Bud. örtüg üdğlarıg 'coverings and obstacles' U II 33, 5; 42, 9: Civ. üç kıldığıg bir kıldığıs tört örtügüg bérdim 'I gave four coverlets, three with borders and one without' USp. 79, 11-12: Xak. XI örtüg 'the covering' (al-sutra) over anything, for example the saddle-cloth (al-gāsiya) over a saddle, and the brocade (al-dibāc) which is laid on the tombs of notables; and also ğitā' kull say 'the cover, lid, roof', etc. of anything Kaş. I 103: KB bayat tapğı barça kerek örtügün 'God's worship must always be performed under cover' 3919; maņa örtüg erdi bu sözler neçe kötürdüg bu örtüg sen aydıñ aça 'these words were somewhat obscure to me; you have removed this obscurity and spoken explaining them' 5818: XIII(?) Tef. örtüg 'covering, curtain', etc. 249: XIV Muh. (among words relating to buildings) al-ğitā 'the roof' ew örtü:ğ: Mel. 76, 3; Rif. 179; (among furnishings, etc.) al-nif 'leather floor-covering' örzğü:ğ 67, 15; örğü:ğ 168 (both corruptions of örtü:ğ): Çağ. XV ff. örtük ('with -k') örtülü . . . maxfi ma'nāsına 'hidden, concealed' Vel. 101; örtük lihāf wa pūsti ki ba-bālā-yi xwad puşand 'a covering or garment that people drape over themselves' San. 71r. 2: Kip. XIV örtü: (so read, most MSS. in error ortuk) al-ğitā Id. 10: XV(?) in margin in SW(?) hand al-ğitā örtü Tuh. 26b. 6.

D örtügün Conc. N. fr. ört-; etymologically 'something covered', in practice 'haystack' and the like. Survives only in NE Şor R I 1842 and Khak. ürtün 'threshing-floor'. The status of the Kip. word is uncertain; it may belong here, but Mong. inder 'balcony, raised platform' (Kov. 279, Haltod 62) was borrowed, as indir/ındır in some NW languages to represent 'threshing-floor' and is listed in Kom. XIV Gr. 273; it survives in NW Kar. R I 1364, Kov. 194 and in SW XX Anat. SDD 771 (from one place only); the Kip. word might be a metathesis of this. Uyg. VIII ff. Civ. in a contract for the sale of land USp. 108, 18-20 the boundaries are described as: E. Burxan kulınıg örtgün; S. 'the big road'; W. D erdem Den. N. fr. er; etymologically 'manly qualities', esp. 'bravery', but more commonly used in a broader sense for 'goodness, virtue, good qualities' and sometimes applied to things as well as people. In Uyg. sometimes appears metathesized as edrem. An early loan-word in Mong. where it was originally used for 'competence, efficiency, capability' (Haenisch 44) and later also for 'wisdom, knowledge' (Kov. 260, Haltod 60). NE Tuv. ertem 'knowledge, science' Pal. 587 is no doubt borrowed fr. Mong., but SW XX Anat. erdem/erden 'virtue, excellence' SDD 542 is a direct survival. See Doerfer II 451. Türkü VIII alıp: erdeml: 'his bravery and manliness' IX. 4; o.o. do. 7 and 12: VIII ff. erdem occurs several times in the Toyok doct. (ETY II 57-9) as a technical term for 'the magical quality, virtue' of a precious stone: Yen. phr. like erdem için and er edrem için 'because of his manly qualities' are common Mal. 29, 4 and 7 etc.: Uyg. VIII ff. Man.-A yétl törülög erdemte ötrü 'by means of his (Xormuzda's) seven kinds of (magic) powers' MI 15, 17-18: Man. erdem sevinç 'the special virtue and attractiveness' (of the Wind God) Wind. 4, 24, 44: Bud. kuan şım pısar kutağmak erdeml 'Kuan-şım Budhisattva's power to bestow good fortune' Kuan. 60; similar phr. 71, 218; erdemke (v.l. edremke) tükellig erdiler 'they were perfected by the (magical) power' (of the great dharāni) TT VI 352; kentünün yaruk küçlüg böğülüğ erdem (v.l. edrem) 'by his own bright, strong, magic power' do. 354; a.o.o.: Civ. otnuş edreml 'the virtue of the remedy' H II 6, 1: O. uruğ Preliminary note. As a N.Ac. in -ğ fr. ur- occurs twice in Kaş., but otherwise means 'seed, pip' with some extended meanings. In this sense unlikely to be a Dev. N. fr. ur- even in its meaning of 'to put' and the like.

D 1 uruğ N.Ac. in -ğ fr. ur-; 'a beating'. N.o.a.b.; cf. 1 uruğluğ. Xak. xı of kulın uruğ urdı: qaraba 'abdahu darb mubālağ fihı' 'he gave his slave a severe beating' Kaş. I 27, 4; similar phr. I 386, 16; both as grammatical examples.

2 uruğ originally a Conc. N. 'seed, pip, kernel', but with metaph. extensions like 'progeny, descendants', and even 'clan', i.e. descendants of a common ancestor. D arğuç Hap. leg.; Dev. N. (N.I.): fr. 2 ar-. Xak. xı arğuç 'anything by which a man is deceived' (yuğtarr); hence the world is called arğuç aju:n al-dunyağ ğarür (sic) Kaş. I 95.

(D) arka:ğ 'the woof (or weft) of a woven material'. S.i.s.m.l.g. except SW. During the medieval period a synonymous word arğaç appeared in Çağ. xv ff. (San. 37r. 8) and Osm. xiv ff. (TTS I 34; II 48; III 33; IV 35), and is still the word used in this sense in SW Osm./Rep. Turkish; Tkm. It seems reasonable to suppose that these two words are Dev. N.s in -ka:ğ and -ğaç respectively fr. ar- which cannot be identified with either 1 or 2 ar-, and possible that arış 'warp', q.v., is also a Dev. N. fr. this verb, but in the last case there are some difficulties of vocalization. Uyğ. viii ff. Bud. aruşı (? , spelt erüşi) arkağı 'the warp and the woof' TT VI 391 (arkuru); a.o. do. 394: Xak. xı arka:ğ luğmatu'l-tawb 'the woof of cloth' Kaş. I 118; a.o. S 3 arkun See akru.

arkar: prob. always 'the mountain sheep, Oris argali', although the Ar. words used by Kaş. normally mean 'mountain goat, chamois' (it is likely that the animal was exotic to Arabs and had no specific name in Ar.). S.i.s.m.l.g., see Shcherbak, p. 117, usually as a generic term without indication of sex. The Mong. synonym arğali is perhaps a l.-w. fr. this word. Uyğ. viii arkar başı: tuşında: prob. 'opposite (the place called) Arkar başı.' Şu. S 1: Xak. xı arkar: 'al-urwiya, the female of al-wu'ail'; its horns are made into knife-handles Kaş. I 117; o.o. I 214, 17 (sukak); 421, 17 (translated al-wa'l): Çağ. xv ff. arkar-ı ğalça 'the wild (Pe. l.-w.) mountain sheep is mentioned twice in Babur (Gibb Memorial facsimile, 141 v. 13; 276v. 10); alok (sic) quç-i kühî 'mountain ram' San. 50r. 20.

D arkış Dev. N. fr. I arka:-; 'a person or group of persons travelling for commercial or official purposes', hence both 'travelling merchants, caravan', and 'official envoys, mission'; it is not always easy to see which is meant and merchants were often used as official envoys.

Survives in NE several dialects arġiŝ/arġis R I 300-1; Khak. arġis 'travelling companion'; NC Kzx. arkis ditto R I 293 (not in MM); SW xx Anat. Dis. V. ARĖ-

1 arka: - 'to search, investigate', etc. N.o.a.b., but no doubt the earlier form of the synonymous SW Osm., Tkm. word ara-, which is not traceable earlier than San. 34r. 18 where it is treated as a Çaġ. word translated miyān-i ġizi-rā tafahhuŝ hardan 'to make an investigation into something', but illustrated only by a Rümi quote. (Xak. XI(?) At. seniġ birlıkipe dalil arkaġan 'anyone who seeks a proof of Thy uniqueness' 7; (the Prophet) biġiġ Ğinde erse siz arkaġ tedī 'said seek knowledge (even) if it is in China' 104: Oġuz XI ol anıġ evin arka:dı: baġaça mā fi baytılı wa talabahu wa fahaşa mā ŷanna fihi 'he enquired what was in his house and searched it and investigated what he thought was in it' Kaŝ. I 283 (2 arka:- follows).

2 arka:- a rhyming jingle not used in isolation; n.o.a.b. Xak. XI (after 1 arka:- in the same para.), and one says of anı: karġa:dı: arka:dı: la'anahu wa ġakara masa'atahu 'he cursed him and spoke of his wickedness'; used as a Hend. (muздаvica(n)) and not by itself; taken from their word for 'praise' (al-ṭanā') alkiŝ; since it was used frequently in a Hend. alka:- also acquired a pejorative meaning (cu'ila fi'l-ŷarr); and since it was originally laudatory the -r- was substituted for -l-, as malŝiŝ became marŝiŝ in Ar. Kaŝ. I 284 ırġa:- 'to shake, or rock (something Acc.'); survives only(?) in NC Kır., Kzx.; it also existed earlier in SW Osm. but has there been displaced by the Freq. f.(?) ırġala-. It is difficult to connect this verb semantically with ırġa:ġ, but there is a NE Tuv. verb ırġay- 'to be crooked' Pal. 570, and this suggests that there was originally a second verb ırġa:- with this meaning. Xak. XI ol yıġa:ç ırġa:dı: hazza'l-ŷacara wa naŷađahā li-yaŷuġ tamaruhu 'he shook (Hend.) the tree so that the fruit should fall'; also used of other things Kaŝ. I 283 (ırġar, ırġama:k); o.o. translated naŷađa III 316, 15; 321, 16: XIII(?) Tef. ırġa- 'to shake' (a tree) 129: (Xwar. XIV ırġa-yırġa-Qutb 91, 206, and Kom. XIV yırġa-CCG; Gr. 133 both meaning 'to enjoy oneself' have no connection with this verb but are Sec. f. of a l.-w. fr. Mong. cirġa- (Hanisch 90) same meaning): Kip. XIV ira:- ħarraġa fi'l-mahd wa mā nāsabahu 'to rock in a cradle and the like, also pronounced ırġa:-, which also means hazza Id. 11: Osm. XIV ol ırġa- 'to shake (something)' in a few texts TTS I 353; IV 394.

D ırġat- Caus. f. of ırġa:-; properly 'to order (something) to be shaken', but from a fairly early date used in the same meaning as, and in place of, ırġa:-. S.i.s.m.l. w. some phonetic changes like NC Kzx. ırit-. Xak. XI ol yıġa:ç ırġattı: anfaġla'l-ŷacara wa ġayrahā 'he had the tree (etc.) shaken' Kaŝ. I 263 (verse; no Aor. or Infin.): XIII(?) Tef. ırġat- 'to shake (someone)' 129: Çaġ. xv ff. ırġat-cunbānidan 'to shake, move (something)' San. 98r. 17 (quotr.).

D ırġal- Pass. f. of ırġa:-; 'to be shaken, to sway', and the like. Survive only(?) in NC Kır., Kzx. Uyġ. VIII ff. Bud. 1 ırġalur ırġalur 'the bushes and trees sway' San. 62r, 5: Civ. artuġ söġüt butiki yüz törlüġin ırġalur 'the stem of the juniper tree sways in every direction' TT I 165-6: Xak. XI yıġa:ç ırġaldı: 'the tree was shaken' (nufida); also used of anything that is shaken (hazza) Kaŝ. I 249 (ırġalur, ırġalma:k): Kom. 'to be shaken, to sway' ırġal-CCG; Gr.

D ırkla- Den. V. fr. ırk:; 'to cast lots, consult the omens'. Survives only(?) in SW Anat. ırıkla- SDD 773. Uyġ. VIII ff. Civ. TT VII 28, 6 (1rū): a.o.o. in this text: Xak. XI ka:m ırkldı: takahhana'l-kāhin mutaŷā'ila(n) fi ŷay 'the magician made magic consulting the omens about something' Kaŝ. III 443 (ırklar, ırkma:k).

D ırġan- Refl. f. of ırġa:-; 'to shake, sway, rock', etc. (Intrans.). The commonest member of the group, s.i.a.m.l.g. Xak. XI yıġa:ç ırġandı: ihtazati'l-ŷacara wa taharrakat 'the tree (etc.) shook and rocked' Kaŝ. I 254 (ırġanur, ırġanma:k): Çaġ. xv ff. ırġan(-ıp) ırġala-Vel. 54; ırġan- Refl. PUD arkuçi: Hap. leg.; listed between umduçi: and erdini: which excludes the possibility that it is an error for arkışçi: a word which might be expected in this sense; it seems rather to be connected with arġu:la-, and is presumably a N.Ag. fr. arku: (or arġu:, but not the arġu: listed above) which seems to be also the basis of arkuru: Xak. xi arkuçi: 'an intermediary (al-mutawassit) between two people, and the messenger (al-rasul) between the relatives of the two parties to a prospective marriage' Kaš. I 141.

VU(D) ura:ġut 'woman', more specific than tüš: which is also used of animals; morphologically a Dev. N. in -ġut; noted only during a limited period but very common during that period, during which it displaced evçi: and the phr. uzun tonliġ, and was used in parallel with išter (išti:); in Çaġ. it was displaced by urġaçi (San. 71r. 18) which may be connected etymologically and s.i.s.m.l., including NC Kir., SC Uzb., SW Tkm.; in other modern languages displaced by forms of katun and the Ar. l.-w. 'awrat, but it is possible that words in some Kip. texts (Hou. 25, 2; Id. 25; Tuh. 3b. 13) and elsewhere which have been described as, or taken to be, 'awrat written with initial alif instead of 'ayn are actually later, contracted forms of ura:ġut. Xak. xi ura:ġut: al-mar'a 'woman' Kaš. I 138; about 60 o.o., all spelt ura:ġut: XIII(?) Tef. uraġut 'woman, wife' 330: xiv Rbġ. uraġut/urawut is the standard word for 'woman' in the earlier MSS. Mon. ERG erk has two basic meanings, (1) 'authority' that is the power to impose one's will on others; (2) 'free-will, independence' that is freedom to decide for oneself without being subject to the authority of others. It became an early l.-w. in Mong. as erke (Haenisch, p. 45) and s.i.a.m.l.g. in a variety of forms, erk/erik, etc. sometimes with a less precise meaning, 'strength, power', and the like. Türkü VIII ff. Man. (if we say that the sun and moon die, or that they rise and set involuntarily or) erki bar erser tuğmazun 'if they have free-will, let them refrain from rising' Chuas. 24-5: Uyg. VIII ff. Bud. (I could not prevent him) erkim tükemedi 'my authority was not sufficient' PP 27, 4; erkimçe tapımça işledim erser 'if I have acted as I chose and pleased' Suc. 136, 1; the word also occurs fairly often in the phr. erk türk 'free-will (or independence) and maturity' e.g. (as a result of that perception—Sanskrit vedana) ajunlarka eq tavarka erkke türkke azlanmak turur 'desire (Sanskrit tyāgā) for rebirth, inanimate and animate possessions, independence, and maturity arise' U II 10, 14-16; o.o. TT IV 4, 4 (esür-) and in a recurrent phr. in Tiş. 19a. 5; 20a. 6; 21b. 2; 25a. 6; 26a. 7 etc.: Civ. (in a favourable omen) uluğ erk keldi 'you have acquired a large measure of independence' TT I 121; erikke (sic) teğir 'he attains independence' TT VII 34, 6; (in a document describing arrangements for the cultivation of a vineyard) [gap]yı-kara Miğ-kara ikeğü erk yok ('the owners?') . . . yi-kara and Min-kara are both no longer able to manage their own affairs(?) Usp. 21, 2; Xak. XI erki al-saltana wa nafâdu'l-amr 'political power and effective authority' Kaş. I 43; KB bar erse yazukum kına erk sağa 'If I have sinned, punish me; you have authority' 639; ajun erki bulduğ 'you have acquired authority over the world' 940; (your father was beğ before you) erk türk tüze 'enjoying independence and maturity' 5151; 00. 942, 1784 Çağ. xv ff. erk ixtiyâr 'free-will, liberty to choose' Vel. 51 (quotns.); erik (spelt) ixtiyâr wa qudrat ('power') San. 99v. 21 (quotn.); Xwar. xiv erk 'authority, influence' Quth 21 (s.v. erklîğ); öz kuluğ turur ne erki bolğay 'he is your own slave, what liberty of action will he have?' Nahc. 360, 8; Kom. xiv erk (1) 'power, authority'; (2) 'free-will' CCG; Gr. 92 (quotns.): Osm. xiv erk 'authority' in Yunus; xv 'liberty to choose between (arasında) two things' in Ent. TTS I 272.

irk 'ram': rare and prob. always w. some more specific meaning like 'three-year-old ram', as opposed to koçkar:r, q.v.; survives in NE Koib., Sag., Tel. Irık/ırık 'ram' R I 1450, 1464; NC Kır. Irık 'three-year old castrated ram'; SW xx Anat. ırk ditto SDD 796; a l.-w. in Mong. as ırge 'castrated ram' (Kow. 326, Halted 71). Xak. x1 ırk al-da'n mma'l-ğanam wa huwa idā ta'ana fi'l-rabi'a 'a ram approaching his fourth year' Kaş. I 43: Kıp. xiv ('ram' koçkar:r/koç) al-xaşı minn'al-ğanam üzüük (no doubt error for this word, vocalization uncertain) Bul. 7, 13.

D örök Conc. N. fr. 2 ö:r-; 'tether' and the like. Survives in NE Tel. örö: R I 1220; NC Kır. örö: Kzx. öre; SW xx Anat. ök SDD 1106; örek 1114; örk 1115; örük 1117. Xak. x1 örk zunūqil-bahn wa tawilatul-xayl 'a halter for a young animal, a horse's tether' Kaş. I 43: KB ay yayığ kutka örk 'oh tether of fickle fortune' 91; bu él bağı örkl 'these (the vezir and the army commander) are the bonds and tethers of the realm' 2419; ikinci hawāka ukuş kılsa örk 'secondly, if he makes understanding a tether for his emotions' 2504; o.o. 722, 1988, 2009: Çağ. xv ff. öre ('grain-pit', i.e. ora) and at kösteği 'a horse's hobble' Vel. 104 (mis-spelt); örük (spelt) rişmāni 'a rope' which they tie to a horse's legs when he is grazing' San. 71 v. 16: Osm. xiv ff. örk 'a horse's tether' in several texts, mainly diets. TTS I 568; II 755.

Mon. V. ERGırk- 'to collect or assemble (things Acc.)'. Survives at any rate in SW Osm. but usually as Intrans., e.g. (of water) 'to stagnate'. Cf. ük-, yığ-. Xak. x1 er tawar ırkrti: cam'a'l-raculul-māl wa ğayrahu 'the man collected property (etc.)' Kaş. III 420 (ırke:r, ırkme:k); Kıp. xiv ırk- camma'a Id. 11: Osm. xiv to xvi ırk- 'to collect, heap up' (wealth, etc.) in several texts TTS I 388; II 545; III 381; IV 435; xviii ırk- (spelt) in Rümi, cam' kardan 'to collect' San. 99r. 15.

ürk- 'to be startled, scared, frightened'. Xwar. xiv ürk- ditto Qutb 124 (ürk-), 204: Kıp. xiv ürk- (v.l. ürük-) cafala 'to be scared' Id. 12: xv ditto Kav. 9, 7; cafala ürük- Tuh. 12a. 8; tawahhama wa cafala ditto 9b. 6.

erig, etc. Preliminary note. Kaş. lists a number of words spelt alif-râ-kâf, but the vocalization of the printed texts and editions is not wholly reliable. The order of the words is chaotic and seems to be as follows (numbering the words as below) 1 erük, örük, örüg, 1 irig, 4 erig, irük, 2 érük, 5 eri:g (sic), 2 irig; Uyg. has some of these words and also 1 erig, 2 erig, and perhaps 3 erig. Erig, the Acc. of 1 er occurs several times in Türkü, and also in KB where it has sometimes been mistaken for 1 erig, but in I S 12 erig is almost certainly not the Acc. of 1 er and may be 3 erig. There are of course considerable possibilities of confusion, particularly between the various erigs.

1 erig 'advice'; readily recognizable in the Hend. (2) öt erig, but hard to identify when alone. Uyg. viii ff. Bud. sızıñ ütünüzni (sic) erigñizni 'your' advice' TT VIII N.10: baxşılarnıñ uluğlarınıñ körgitmiş boşgunmış ötinçe erigñe inçip evrilmedim erser 'If I have not behaved in accordance with the advice (Hend.) displayed and learnt of the teachers and great ones' Suv. 136, 4-6; yađıp nomluğ él(1)ıgler teg ötin erigin disseminating his advice (Hend.) like the dharmarâjas' Hüen-t. 2003-4; a.o. do. 2017; Xak. x1 KB öt sav erig 'advice and guidance' 1548, 2617, 3084, etc.; erig in the phr. sınadı erig 593 (and 619, 764) seems to mean 'the man'.

D 2 erig (?erig) in the phr. erig barıg Dev. N.s fr. er- (see 2 ér-); peg to Uyg. but see 5 erig:g. Uyg. viii ff. Bud. (Hidimba, jumping about in demonic rage) élgin adakın Arcunı toğaç öürğülük erig barıg kılıp 'making wild motions(?) with hands and feet to kill the hero Arjuna' U II 25, 2 ff.; anıñ yavlak eriglerin barıgların 'his evil wild motions(?)' TT X 347; o.o. U III 63, 5 (yalğantur-); Hüen-t. 2078 (not pejorative, but reading uncertain, tuş-).

D 3 erig Dev. N. fr. 1 er-; perhaps occurs as below. Türkü viii erig yerte: 'in the place where it is(?)' I S 13 (twice); Uyg. viii ff. Bud. Sanskrit brāhma'sca and (by the Brahmanical) tört törlüğ zarwa: (?so read) erigle:ri üze: 'by the four kinds of Brahmanical existence(?)' TT VIII F.10: tözin erigñin 'its origin and existence (or nature?)' Suv. 593, 22.

D 4 erig N./A.S. fr. eri- (erü-); 'melting, liquescent'. S.i.s.m.l., usually as erü: Xak. x1 erig neñ 'anything liquescent' (dā'ib) like oil (al-samm), etc., also anything that melts after being frozen (dāba ba'da'l-cumüd) Kaş. I 70.

5 eriğ (?eriğ) possibly identical with 2 eriğ; n.o.a.b., but see eriğlik. Xak. XI eriğ (sic) yılık: al-dabbatu'l-fāriha 'a lively pack-animal'; hence one says eriğ at faras rā'i 'a spirited horse'; not known in Oğuz Kaş. I 70; ıkrıla:çım eriğ (sic) boldı: sabaħa cawādi wa 'addā fi'l-sayr 'my thoroughbred horse ran swiftly on the journey' I 139, 16; Kom. XIV 'lively, energetic' erüv CCG; Gr.

I erük a generic term for 'stone fruit', the particular variety being indicated by a qualifying Adj. S.i.a.m.l.g. except NE usually with initial ö-ü- except in SW; a l.-w. in Russian as uryuk, which is also used as a reverse l.-w. in some NE languages. Uyg. VIII ff. Civ. tülüğ erükñüğ kasıkn 'the skin of a peach' II I 37-8; sarığ erük uruğ 'an apricot kernel' do. 101; et(?) erük xwast 'the flower (Chinese hua) of an et(?) plum' H II 8, 22; tülüğ erük (?so read) çe:çe:kle:nür 'the peach flowers' TT VIII P.24; XIV *Chin.-Uyg. I 69; o.o. I 318, 14 (çap); II 282, 11 (1 kak); XIV Muh.(?) al-iccäs kara: erük; al-xawx tülüğ erük; al-mişmiş sa:ruğ erük Rif. 182 (only); Çağ. XV ff. ürk (?error for ürük) 'the fruit called erük' and especially zardālu 'apricot' Vel. 101; erük nām-i zardālu San. 37v. 10; Kom. XIV 'plum' erük CCI; Gr.: Kıp. XIII al-mişmiş sa:ru: erük ('in Tkm.' inserted in error) also called zardālu: in Tkm. taken from Pe. Hou. 7, 17: XIV erük al-iccäs; it is a general term (muştarak) for peach, cherry, yellow plum (al-barqūq), and apricot; and if they mean 'apricot' they say şarı: erük; 'peach' is called paftalu; a Pe. word Id. 12: XV iccäs kara erük Tuh. 5a. 3; barqūq erük do. 7b. 10; qirāşiya 'cherry' kara erük do. 29a. 4; mişmiş sarı erük do. 35a. 2.

2 erük (?erük) 'tanning material', later also 'tanned leather'. Survives in NE Alt., Koib., Leb., Sag., Tel. irik RI 1459; NC Kzx. irik do.; erük MM 145. Xak. XI erük (vocalized erik as well) kull mā yudbağ bihi'l-cild 'anything with which a hide is tanned'; hence one says teri: erükledi: 'the hide was tanned' Kaş. I 70; Kom. XIV 'tanned leather' erik CCI; Gr.

D I irig N./A.S. in -ğ fr. iri:-; 'mouldering, decayed'. Survives as irig/iririk in several NE languages, including Khak., Tuv. and as irü: in NC Kir. Xak. XI irig ne:ğ kull say' baliya 'anything decayed'; hence haşimul-xatāb 'rotten wood' is called irig otuğ Kaş. I 70.

IS 2 irig 'tough, hard' of persons and things, lit. and metaph. S.i.m.m.l.g. as iri/iririk, rarely yirik. Prob. a Sec. f. of ıdrig q.v. Uyg. VIII ff. İnd. irig sarsığ söz (or sav) 'rough, harsh language' U II 76, 6; 85, 23; TT IV 8, 71; Sw. 220, 2; TMIV 252, 17; 255, 114 (clear in

D irük Pass. Dev. N./A. fr. 2 ir:-; Hap. leg. but see irüklük. Xak. XI irük al-tulma fi'l-hā'it wa ğayrihi 'a crack, or breach, in a wall, etc.' Kaş. I 70 (prov.).

örüg 'rest, repose (esp. in the course of a journey); quiet, restful'. Survives in NE Şor örüg/fürü (?sic) 'quiet, modest' R I 1224, 1883; NC Kir. örüg/örügül; Kzx. erü 'a halt on a journey; sedentary' and SW XX Anat. örük 'a vacation' SDD 1117. The occurrences in Uyg. have been much misunderstood; sometimes it has been taken as a Sec. f. of ürüg and translated 'serene', which is not the meaning of either word (see e.g. TT V p. 28, note B.1) and sometimes transcribed ürük, taken as derived fr. I ür and translated 'everlasting' (see e.g. Index to USP.). Uyg. VIII ff. Man. tınguluk orunta örügün 'by rest in a place of repose' TT III 110; Bud. örüg uzatı sımtağsız dyanda örügün amıln erürler 'they rest and are peaceful in restful, long-lasting meditation free from neglectfulness' Sw. 247, 16-18; o.o. of örüg amil see amul; o.o. of örüg uzatı U II 72, 1 (i); USP. 102a. 41; Suv. 613, 6; Xak. XI örüg al-iqāma fi makān muddata(n) 'a temporary halt at a place'; hence one says sü: o:n kü:n örüg boldı: 'the army halted (aqāma) in one place for ten days without leaving it or raiding'; also used of an amir (i.e. beg) or a tribe (qabila) when they halt *Kaş. dirang-i ordü-yi salâtin . . . ki dar cā'i wāqi' şavād 'a pause and halt of a royal army which occurs at some place' San. 37v. 9; örük (spelt) (inter alia) ditto abbreviated do. 71 v. 17: Kıp. XIII al-maqām 'rest' (opposite to 'movement' tepreş) örü: Hou. 26, 21.

D örük Pass. Dev. N. fr. 2 ör-; lit. 'anything plaited', w. various specific applications. Easily confused w. örk, but s.i.s.m.l., usually as örü. Xak. XI örük kull şay' madfūr 'anything plaited', hence al-dafira, 'a plait of hair' is called örük saç Kaş. I 69: Kıp. XV zafira Tuh. 24a. 13 misread as dafira and glossed örmeç/örük.

D erki: an Adv. discussed in v. G. ATG para. 359 and Hüen-ts. Biog., p. 21, note 62; in spite of the contrary opinion expressed therein, it seems, except on the rarest possible occasions, to be used only at the end of questions to indicate that a categorical answer is not expected; the best translation is, therefore, a periphrasis like 'do you suppose that . . .' or 'is it likely that . . .'. Like erken and I erinç it seems to be a Dev. form fr. I er- dating back to a time when the verbal Suff. were rather different fr. those in VIII and later. Survives only(?) in NE Tuv. İrgi' 'a particle used in questions to make them more polite'. Uyg. VIII ff. Man. amti ertip kalır erki sen 'now you are perhaps passing away?' TT II 15, 7-8: Bud. bolar (sic) yég mü erki azu erme:z mü erki tép sézıklig bolmış 'having become uncertain whether these things were good or perhaps not?' TT VIII H. 5-6; alı çevişli neteg erki 'what sort of devices (Hend.) do you suppose that he uses?' U II 16, 24; Kuan. 99-100; ne tiltağın ne üçün teğınmek bolur erki 'for what reason and why do you suppose that perception (Sanskrit vedanā) occurs?' U II 10, 17-18; o.o. of direct questions U II 22, 4; 31, 43; U III 45, 6; U IV 14, 145-6; Suv. 132, 15; 599, 23; Hüen-ts. 62(?), 1829, 1884, etc.—tıplağalı bolğay erki men 'I shall, I suppose, listen' U III 29, 4-5: Xak. XI erki: harf şakk' 'a particle expressing doubt'; hence one says ol kelir mü erki: a yahdur huwa am lā 'do you suppose he is coming or not?'; wa huwa yunāb manāba'l-istifhām it takes the place of an interrogative Kaş. I 129: KB nelük tuğdum erki yana ölgeli 'why do you suppose that I was born, if I am just to die?' 1136; kavuşğum kaçan erki teprl billr 'God knows when, if ever, we shall meet again' 6176; a.o. 5121 (2 ö): XIII(?) Tef. erki in questions and statements 'perhaps' 82: Çağ. XV ff. see erken: Xwar. XIV erki in questions Qutb 21.

erkek 'male, masculine', in antithesis to tişi: 'female', a generic term applied to men and animals; said in v. G. ATG, para. 59, to be an Intensive form in -kek of 1 er, but this is certainly wrong since the initial is é-, not e-, and there is no adequate evidence of the existence of a suffix -kek (as well as -gek, which is not an Intensive). D erklig P.N./A. fr. erk; both 'possessing power or authority' and 'possessing free-will or independence, free to do as one likes'. The two meanings are very close together, and it is often difficult to decide which is intended; when applied to God prob. both are, and 'mighty' is the best translation, though it does not give the whole meaning. Survives in NC Kır. erkütü; Kzx. érikiti, irikti, and NW Kar. L., T. erkli; Kaz. irikiti. The phr. erklig xan was early adopted as the title of 'the ruler of the underworld'; it was borrowed by Mong. as erlik kağan and this phr. has been borrowed by some NE languages. Türkü VIII üze: teprî: erklig (gap) 'Heaven is mighty above' *Ix. S ergen See ergen.

D erken like erklî: (q.v.) and 1 erinç an archaic Dev. form fr. 1 er-; originally used after verbs in the Aor. f. to mean 'while', later used rather more freely to mean 'while being', see v. G. ATG, para. 437. Survives in NE Tuv. erğin 'a particle used to give a flavour of indefiniteness to a statement' (perhaps a Sec. f. of erklî); and as eken/iken, etc. 'while being' in most other language groups. Türkü VIII ff. At. biligsüz tirig erken atı ölüğ 'the ignorant man's name (reputation) dies while he is still alive' 96; a.o. 215; Tef. yigit erken 'while a young man' and similar phr. 78 ff. (s.v. 1 er-): Çağ. xv ff. both authorities list érken, érkin, éken, and ékin, usually without cross-refcs., and stating that they are all synonymous; but the examples show that érkin/ékin has a different meaning and is a Sec. f. of erki; érkin ('with -k') is used with another word, e.g. bolmadı erkin olmadımı 'was it not?' (quotn.); érken ('with -k-' has the same meaning (quotn. containing érkenni 'his being') Vel. 49; éken ('with -g-', sic in error) usually used with another word, e.g. fulân éken fulân ihen or idügi 'being so-and-so' (quotns.); ékin ('with -k-') usually used with another word, e.g. bu érdi ékin bu idi (quotns.) do. 64; érken (spelt) hast 'is' (quotn. containing tilbe érken dür 'is mad'); also spelt érkin (quotn. ne érkin said to mean both 'what is?' and 'what liberty of action?') also a lafz-i zâ'id 'supplementary word' used dar rawâbiť 'in compound expressions' (quotn.) San. 99v. 28 (several oblique cases of érken follow); éken (spelt) same translation as érken (quotn.), also spelt ékin San. 108v. 19 (several oblique cases follow); ékin (spelt) inter alia; (2) abbreviation of érkin az cumla-i rawâbiť meaning hast (quotn.); (3) a supplementary word used as an ornament in compound expressions (quotns.) do. 109r. 28; Xwar. XIII érken/éken 'while' Ali 37.

D 1 irkin Intrans. Dev. N./A. fr. irk-; 'collected together in one place' and the like. Survives in SW xx Anat. irkin (and irkim) 'a hoard, buried treasure' SDD 796, and also perhaps Osm. ürkün 'a pool of rain water' and the like. Xak. XI irkin suv al-mâ'u'l-mustanqa 'stagnant water'; also used of anything collected together (muctami); hence the chiefs (ahâbir) of the Karluk are called köi irkin meaning that 'his intellect is concentrated like a full pool' ('aqluhu muctami' ka'l-ğadiri'l-mumtali) (see 2 irkin): irkin yağmur al-mařaru'l-dâ'im ayym 'continuous rain for several days' Kař. I 108.

2 irkin a title borne by tribal chiefs, inferior to xağan but superior to beg, cf. elteber, 1 çor. In addition to the occurrences in Turkish below, the word often occurs in Chinese records transcribed i-kin (sometimes mis-spelt ssü-kin owing to confusion between two similar Chinese characters). The subject is discussed at length by F. W. K. Müller in 'Uigurische Glossen' in the Festschrift für Friedrich Hirth, Berlin, 1920, pp. 317 ff. where it is stated that the title Kül Erkin (sic) also occurs in Rařidu'l-din and Abu'l-ğaxi, but in the Russian translation of the former, Rashid-ad-din. Sbornik letopisei, Moscow-Leningrad, 1952 ff., vol. 1, p. 147, the spelling is Kül Irkin. Kař.'s etymology is unconvincing; it is almost certain that the title 2 kül, q.v., is not identical with köi; this word, too, is prob. merely a title, but if it is der. fr. irk- the meaning is prob. something like 'convener'. Türkü VIII anta: késre: yer(?) bayırku: uluğ irkin yağı: boltı: 'after that the paramount irkin of the Yer (reading uncertain) Bayırku: became hostile' I E 34; [? uluğ

Irkin came' Ix. 21 (it is possible that the word before Bayırku: in the first quotn. which is damaged on the stone and the word before Irkin in the second are identical and may be sir, q.v.): (Uyğ. VIII ff. Civ. the words Irken Irkini in Usp. 22, 8-9 are transcribed as two P.N.s Irkenür Irkey in Arat's revised text, prob. correctly): Xak. XI Kař. I 108 (1 irkin): KB in the list of ranks and official titles in 4065 ff. which is partly corrupt in all MSS. 4068b. prob. reads kyasul kül irkin 'some become kül irkin'; neğü tér eşitğil İla irkini (so read) 'hear what the irkin of İla says' 4752.

D örgen Conc. N. fr. 2 ör-; 'plaited rope, cord', and the like. Survives, sometimes with slightly different meanings, in NE Kier. örgöp (sic) R I 1230; NW Kar. L. T. örken (and L. erken) R I 779, 1227; Kırım örken do. and SW xx Anat. örgen/örken SDD 1115. The word is syn. w. 1 uruk, the two words are quite unconnected but some mediaeval and modern words like urğan in Xwar. XIII 'Ali 56 and SW Osm., Tkm. and perhaps arğan/arkan in SE Türki, NC Kir., Kzx., etc. seem to lie squarely between the two. Oğuz (sic?) XI örgen al-nis 'the thong of a camel's girth' Kař. I 108; a.o. The entries in Kaş. are mostly unvocalized but the Uyğ. spellings of this verb and irklet- and the alternative form with prosthetic y- make the spelling certain. Uyğ. VIII ff. Bud. PP 65, 5 (see E işle-): Xak. XI ol yėriđ irkledi: wai'a'l-ard 'he trampled on the ground (etc.)'; dialect form (luğā) of ikle:di: (misvocalized ikle:di:) Kaş. III 443 (irkle:r, irkle:mek; all unvocalized); ol yė:riđ ikle:di: same translation Kaş. I 287 (ikle:r, ikle:mek; all unvocalized); ikledi: (sic) me:niñ ađak kōrmedip öđri: tuzak 'my foot accidentally trod (wai'a) on the hidden trap' I 380, 14; ol yėriđ yikle:di: same translation, in the dialect of those who converted alif into yā; the more correct form (al-afşah) is ikle:di III 309 (yikle:r, yikle:mek): KB see örkle-.

D örkle- Den. V. fr. örk; 'to tether (a horse, etc. Acc.)'. Survives in SW xx Anat. ökle- örkle-örkle-örkle-ürkle- SDD 1106, etc.; some of these forms and NE Tel. örö:lo-, NC Kır, ditto.; Kzx. örele- arc perhaps der. fr. örük. Xak. XI ol atığ örkle:di: 'he tethered (sadda) the horse to a stake with a long rope' Kaş. III 443 (örkle:er, örkle:me:k); KB (any beg who is prudent watches over his realm) yağı boynı yançtı üze örkleđi 'he crushes the enemy's neck and ties him down' 2016 (the Fergana MS. reads ikledi 'trampled', and this, or irkledi, makes better sense, and is prob. the correct reading): (XIII(?) Tef. örklen- 'to be fastened to (something Dat.)' Refl. f. 248 (örklen-); 340 (ürklen-, same quotn.)); Osm. XVI örkle- translates Ar. words for 'to tether' in two dicts. TTS II 756; IV 629.

D irklet- Caus. f. of irkle-; 'to make (someone Dat.) trample on (something Acc.)'. N.o.a.b. Uyğ. VIII ff. Man. bés ajunuğ irkletip ozkurtuğuz 'Thou hast saved us, making us trample on the five forms of existence' TT III 47; Xak. XI ol anar yér ikletti: 'he made him trample (ayta'ahu) on the ground' Kaş. I 265 (ikletür, ikletme:k, all unvocalized).

D erklen- Refl. Den. V. fr. erk; 'to possess power or authority'. Survives only(?) in NW Kar. L., T. RI 781; Kow. 184. Türkü VIII ff. Man. él(I)enmekim etöz meşisi beged-mekim erklenmekim 'my being a ruler, bodily pleasure, my being a beg, and my possession of authority' (have become very worthless and trivial in my sight) TT II 8, 43-4.

D irkin- Refl. f. of irk-; 'to collect (things) for oneself'. N.o.a.b.; irkin- 'to stop from hesitation or fright' Red. 293 is no doubt a Sec. f. of ürkün- (see ürkünç). Xak. XI ol ö:zñe: neğ irkindi: 'he collected (cama'a) things for himself' Kaş. I 254 (irkinür, irkinme:k); Çağ. xv ff. irkin-(-ür) translated qaşd u mayl eyle- 'to be inclined towards', but in the supporting quotn. the meaning is clearly 'to collect' Vel. 52 (not in San. where irk- is described as Rümi).

VUD örğen- Refl. f. of örge-; 'to rest' or the like. This seems the obvious etymological explanation of this word, although 'to be saturated' or the like would suit the context better. N.o.a.b. Türkü VIII ff. Man. (then that good man) kamağ ödı tonı bastan (sic, as usually in this text) adağ(k)a teğı kanka iriñ(k)e örğenip 'with his whole body and clothing from head to foot lying in blood and pus' M I 5, 12-14; arığsızka örğenmişin (seeing himself) 'lying in filth' do. 6, 7-8.

D I ergür- contracted (cf. ergüz, ergüz-) Caus. f. of erü-; 'to melt, dissolve (something Acc.)'; 'to macerate (something Acc., in something Dat.)'. N.o.a.b. Uyğ. VIII ff. Man. (the fourth virtue of the Wind God is that he) tum[ı]ğığ] ergürer 'melts what is frozen' Wind. 39-40; (the fifth that) ısiğığ] ergürer tarkarur 'he melts and dissipates heat' do. 46-7; Civ. matu luğ suvka ergürüp 'macerating citrons (l.-w.) in water' H II 22, 41; a.o. do. 24, 42; Xak. XI yağ] ergürdi: 'he melted (ağaba) the fat' (etc.) Kaş. I 227 (ergürür, ergürme:k).

D 2 ergür- Caus. f. of 2 ér-; etymologically 'to cause (something) to reach or arrive', but except in Osm. with rather different meanings. Survived in Osm. until fairly recently, but now only in xx Anat. ergör-/ergür-/irkör-/irgör- SDD 544, 796. Uyğ. VIII ff. Civ. erte kün tavrak buyan kıl aşnukan ergürü etözünı közed 'early in the morning swiftly do good deeds; seizing the first possible opportunity(?) preserve your body' TT I 171-3; ürkürü buyan kıl TT VII 28, 2 is prob. a misreading of ergürü: Xak. XI ol aşka: ergürdi: adraka'l-ta'am qabl an yanfalit 'he got hold of the food before it went past him'; also used of anyone who gets hold of anything before it goes past him Kaş. I 227 (ergürür, ergürme:k); Osm. XIV ff. ergür-/irgür- (ergür-)/erür-/irür- (erür-) 'to make, or let (someone Acc.) reach (a place Dat.); to bring (something Acc., to someone Dat.)', c.i.a.p. TTS I 275; II 395; III 263; IV 436.

D erksin- Refl. Simulative Den. V. fr. erk; 'to have power, or authority (over someone Acc. or üze)'. N.o.a.b. Türkü VIII ff. Man. él(I)enmek erksinmek 'to be a ruler and have authority' M III 16, 9 (ii); a.o. do. 19, 14; Uyğ. VIII ff. Man.-A M I 27, 10 (uğur): Bud. bursağ kuvrağ üze erksindimiz erser 'if we have exercised authority over Buddhist communities (Hend.)' TT IV 6, 45; o.o. Pfahl. 22, 3 (uğur); USp. 102a. 7-8; Civ. şilavantil-ar seliler erksinip 'the clergy and laity (l.-w.) having authority' (over certain properties) USp. 88, 26-7; Kom. XIV barçaları erksindeçli 'ruler over all' CCG; Gr.

D irkiş- Co-op. f. of irk-; 'to help to collect', etc. S.i.s.m.l. Xak. XI ol maña: tawar irkişti: 'he helped me to collect (fı cam) the property'; also for 'to compete'. *Kaş. D ürküş- Co-op. f. of ürk-; 'to be completely panic-stricken'. Survives only(?) in NE Khak. Xak. XI Kaş. I 155, 19 (anın); n.m.e.: Çağ. xv ff. ürküş- (spelt) synonym (murâdîf) of ürk- in the sense of ram kardan 'to be frightened' San. 69r. 11.

D ergüz- contracted (cf. ergüz, ergür-) Caus. f. of erü-. Survives only(?) in NE Tuv. Uyğ. VIII ff. Civ. ölüğ mişkiçniñ yakrısın ergüzüp 'melting the fat of a dead wild cat' HI 57-8.

Tris. ERG

örükl: N./A.S. fr. örü:; 'situated above, high'. Survives only in most NE dialects 'öregi/örögü: R I 1219, 1221. Uyğ. VIII ff. Civ.

üstünki altınki tapladı örüki kođıki sevindi 'those above and below were pleased, the high and the low were glad' TT I 128-9.

D erigliğ P.N./A. fr. 3 erig(?); n.o.a.b. Uyğ. viii ff. Bud. Sanskrit sādhuvihāram (damaged, but prob. reading) 'one who spends his life virtuously' edğü erigliğ TT VIII C.1: (Xak.) XIII(?) Tef. zahara 'to appear (to someone, üze)' erigliğ bol- 81 (belongs here?).

D é:riglik Hap. leg. (but see örüglük); A.N. fr. 5 erig. Xak. XI é:riglik farāhatu'l-davābb 'liveliness in pack animals' Kaş. I 152.

D erüklük A.N. (Conc. N.) fr. 1 erük; survives in SW Osm. eriklik 'a plum orchard'. Xak. XI erüklük manbatu'l-xawx 'a peach orchard' Kaş. I 152.

D irüklük A.N. fr. irük; n.o.a.b. Xak. XI KB (if a beg does not perform the essential duties just mentioned) irüklük kirür éike anda basa 'disintegration sets in in the realm in due course' 5906.

D örüglük A.N. fr. örüg; 'calm, quietness', and the like. Survives in a word meaning 'an entertainment provided for a newly-arrived neighbour by earlier residents' noted as NC Kir. örüklük/örü:lük; Kzx. érulik (sic); SW xx Anat. örüülük SDD 1118. See Doerfer II 590. Xak. XI KB armulluk kerek erke kükü opay, örüglük kerek beğke tuğsa kün ay 'a man of upright character must be tranquil and a beg calm whether the sun or moon is rising' 325; a.o. 1988: (XIII?) Tef. istawā 'to rest' örüglüg bol- 81 (transcribed erigliğ??).

D örüklüg P.N./A. fr. örük; 'plaited' and the like. S.i.s.m.l. as örüll/örülük. Xak. XI KB örüklüg saçı 'his plaited hair' 5825.

D erkligliğ A.N. fr. erhlig; 'power, authority'. Survives only(?) in NC Kir. erktü:lük; Kzx. ériktilik. Xak. XI KB tüzü nepke yetti bu erkligliğlik 'Thine authority extends over all things' 9; XIII(?) Tef. erkligliğ 'independence, arbitrary behaviour(?)' 83.

F örğesün 'thorn' a Mong. word (Kow. 590, Haltod 114) is mentioned as such in San, but does not seem to have become a l.-w. in any Turkish languages; it is therefore very unlikely that this is the word in H II since these medicinal texts are almost certainly all anterior to XIII; it is perhaps a misreading of övkesin 'his lung'. Uyğ. viii ff. Civ. kızıl örğesin name of a drug H II 34, 21: Çağ. xv ff. örkesün (spelt) in Mong. xār 'thorn', in Ar. called şavk San. 71r. 20.

D erksizlik A.N. fr. erksiz; 'lack of independence', etc. Survives only(?) in NC Kzx. ériksizdik and NW Kar. L. T. erksizlik R I 784. Xak. XI KB körü barsa yaljuk bu erksizlikin 'if a man could see that he has no (real) freedom of action' (how could he behave so badly?) 1534.

Tris. V. ERG-

D 1 örgüçlen- Refl. Den. V. fr. 1 örgüç; 'to be lumpy, humped', etc. S.i.s.m.l. Uyğ. viii ff. Man.-A (of the sea) örgüçlenmekliğ 'being rough' M III 9, 3 (ii): Xak. XI suv örgüçlendi: māca'l-mā 'the water was covered with waves'; (here comes 2 örgüçlen-); and one says eşiç örgüçlendi: şarati'l-qidr dāt uşfiya 'the pot had a foot-stand' (i.e. not a spherical bottom) Kaş. I 315 (erkeklenür, erkekleme:k); in the first two meanings the word seems to be a muddle with 1 örgüçlen-).

D erigle:- Den. V. fr. 1 erig; noted only in the Hend. ötle:- erigle:- 'to advise'. Uyğ. viii ff. Bud. U III 15, 11, etc. (ötle:-).

D erükle:- (érükle:-) Den. V. fr. 2 erük (érük); 'to tan (hides)'. Xak. XI teri: erükle:di: dabağa'l-cild 'he tanned the hide' Kaş. I 306 (erükle:r, erükle:me:k); a.o. I 70 (2 erük): Kom. xiv 'tanned leather' erikleğen teri CCG; Gr.

D erüklen- Refl. Den. V. fr. 1 erük; pec. to Kaş. Xak. XI yığaç erüklendi: 'the tree bore peaches, apricots, or plums' Kaş. I 294 (erüklenür, erüklenme:k); a.o. III 348, 13.

D iriglen- Refl. Den. V. fr. 2 irig; survives only(?) in NC Kir. irden- 'to grow (in size or bulk)' Yud. 370. Xak. XI KB iriglendi ödlek mağa tüğdi kaş 'the times were harsh and frowned on me' 1586; (do not be angry if harsh words are addressed to you) köni söz irig ol iriglenme öz 'truth is harsh, do not be harsh yourself' 5775.

D erükse:- Hap. leg.; Desid. Den. V. fr. 1 erük Xak. XI er erükse:di: 'the man longed (tamannā) for peaches, etc.' Kaş. I 303 (erükse:r, erükse:me:k).

D erksintür- Caus. f. of erksin-, but practically syn. w. it. N.o.a.b. Uyğ. viii ff. Bud. Sanskrit adhīpatin kṛtvā 'making him a supreme ruler' erksintürmek kılıp TT VIII A.7; silādhīpati 'the lord of uprightness' çaşşāpat erksindürme:klig do. A.44.

D erksire:- Hap. leg.; Priv. Den. V. fr. erk; 'to lack independence or authority'. Uyğ. viii ff. (gap) erksireyin (gap) M II 6, 8.

Dis. ARL

?E erle: Hap. leg.; the alif is unvocalized, but otherwise the word is quite clear; the translation suggests that it is a scribal error for ergü; q.v. Xak. XI bolsa: kimliḡ altun kümüş erle: éter 'if a man gets gold and silver, kaḏā yamhad waṭan 'so he establishes a residence' (and when he is settled in place he offers his worship to God) *Kaḡ. D urluk 'seed' (for sowing); metaph. 'progeny, descendants'. Not definitely traceable earlier than XIII, the prob. earliest date of the Uyḡ. texts quoted below. Prima facie A.N. (Conc. N.) fr. ur, but the only evidence for the existence of such a word is the entry in Id. below where ur may be a misunderstanding of uru; Sec. f. of 2 uruḡ. The likeliest explanation is that this is a crasis of uruḡluk, q.v. Survives only(?) in NW Kar. L., T. urluk/urlox R I 1670; Kow. 275; Kaz. orluk and SW xx Anat. urluk SDD 1420. Dis. V. ARL-

D 1 arıl- Hap. leg.; the context seems to require that this should be taken as a Pass f.

of 1 ar:- although that is an Intrans. V.; 'to be tired'. If a Pass. f. of 2 ar:-, 'to be tricked'. Türkük VIII I S 9, IIN 7 (alkın-).

D 2 arıl- Hap. leg.; a mere jingle used only in the phr. arıl sarıl- (see 1 sarıl-) and without a separate existence; apparently different from éril-, q.v.

D éril- Hap. leg.; so spelt but ?eril-. Prima facie a mere jingle like 2 arıl-, but unlike that word entered separately with Aor. and Infin. Sec seril-. Xak. XI er ériłdi: serilđi: ihtazza'l-racul min ḡamm wa lāma nafsahu fihi 'the man was shaken with grief and blamed himself for it' Kaḡ. I 196 (érilür, érilme:k).

D 1:ril- Pass. f. of 2 1r:-; lit. 'to be breached' and the like; metaph. (of the moon) 'to wane' (i.e. to have part of its visible surface cut off). N.o.a.b. Xak. XI tam 1:riłdi: 'the wall (etc.) was breached' (inṭalama); hence one says ay 1:riłdi: 'the moon waned' (axaḏa'l-qamar fi'l-nuḡšān) towards the end of the month Kaḡ. I 195 (prov.; no Aor. or Infin.); bu er ol öpkem ürülge:n 'this man is constantly swelling with anger like a bladder' I 158; XIII(?) Tef. ürül- (of a trumpet) 'to be blown' 340; Xwar. XIV ditto Nahc. 177, 3; Osm. XV to XVIII (only) ürül- 'to be distended; (of a trumpet) to be blown' in several texts TTS I 747; II 955; III 733; IV 805.

D ırla:- Den. V. fr. I ır; 'to sing, recite', and the like. S.i.m.m.l.g. Although often spelt with prosthetic y-, most early forms and the NE form ırla- and NC Kir. ırda- show that this is secondary. Uyğ. VIII ff. Bud. ırlayu 'singing' (with a lovely voice) U III 46, 13; a.o. TT X 144-5 (I ır)—yırlap U III 75, 11; TT X 442; bödiyü yırlayu 'dancing and singing' U I 41, 21; IV 8, 36; o.o. PP 70, 2; 71, 1; Xak. Tris. ARM

D örümçek Conc. N. fr. örüm; 'spider'. Survives, more or less in this form, in NE, SE, and SW. In the medieval period an alternative word örmekçr:, N.Ag. fr. örmek, appeared, and survives more or less in this form in NC, NW. This word was metaphorized to örğemçl which is first noted in Çaçğ. xv ff. Vel. 102; San. 71r. 21, and still survives in SC. See also I bö:ğ. Xak. x1 örümçek al-'ankabüt 'spider' Kaş. I 152; xiv Muh. al-'ankabüt örümçik Mel. 74, 4; örümçük Rif. 177; Xwar. xiv örümçük ditto Qub 124; Kom. xiv 'spider' örümçük CCG; Gr: Kıp. xv 'ankabüt (böy and) örümçük Tuh. 25a. 13 (in margin, 'also örümçek'). ?F armağa:n/yarmağa:n 'gift', and more specifically 'a gift brought back from a journey'. The word also exists in both forms in Pe., and, as there is no obvious Turkish etymology for either form, it is prob. one of the Pe. l.-w. in early Oğuz (see ören). Survives only(?) in SW Osm. armağan. See Doerfer II 465. Oğuz XI armağa:n 'a gift (hadıya) which a traveller who has prospered (al-gādımı'l-gānim) brings back from his journey for his neighbours'; there is another form (huğa), yarmağan, and this is more correct (aşahh) Kaş. I 140 (in the MS. aşahh is mis-spelt amuç, and this has been taken as an alternative form for 'gift' by some editors): Xwar. XIV armağan 'gift' Quib 10; MN 33, etc.: Kip. D eren irregular Plur. of 1 er; properly 'men', but as in the case of oğlan; its true nature was forgotten quite early, and it was treated as a Sing. S.i.a.m.l.g. usually meaning 'real man, fighting man', and the like. Türkü VIII eren is fairly common but invariably follows a numeral or numerical expression like az 'few', which suggests that it was regarded more as a collective than a Plur. (which would not normally follow a numeral), e.g. kañım xağan yeti yeğirmi: eren taşıkmiş 'my father the xağan and 17 men marched out' IE 11, II E 10; o.o. IE 34; IE 40 (ükün-); IN 9; II E 37; II S 11; Ongin 5: Uyg. F ören 'bad, ruined'; as Kaş. says a corruption of Persian wayrān, which occurs as a l.-w. in several modern languages in its original or a corrupt form, e.g. NC Kır., Kzx. oyrān/oyron. The latest trace of ören is in Osm. Sami 200, where it is described as 'obsolete'. Oğuz x1 ören al-radi 'min hull şay' 'bad' of anything; I consider this to be taken from the Per. word wayrān 'ruined' (al-xarāb); the Oğuz when they mixed with the Persians (ixtalaqat bi'l-furs) forgot many Turkish words and used Pe. words instead; this is one of them Kaş. I 76: Osm. xiv to xvii ören 'ruined, desolate' in several texts TTS I 568; II 755.

F(E) üren the Mongolian word üren 'seed, fruit, progeny' (Kow. 577, Haltod 126) occurs as a l.-w. in several NE languages and NC Kır. It has also been read in Türkü VIII ff. Man. üren yaşarur yađılır 'the seed turns green and spreads' M III 20, 10-11 (i), but it is said that the text is very difficult to read, and there is no reasonable doubt that this word is a misreading of evlin.

ürüğ 'white' in a general sense, cf. I a:k. Very common down to XI but almost obsolete thereafter. Survives in Yakut ürüğ 'white' (Pek. 3178), and perhaps NC Kır. ürüğ barağ 'dawn' and SW xx Anat. ürün 'milk, yağurt' SDD 1436. Sporadic Uyğ. spellings yürüğ are unlikely to represent an earlier form. Türkü VIII ürüğ kümüşi:n 'his white silver' II N 11; a.o. T 48 (altun): VIII ff. ürüğ esri: 'white dappled' Irkb 4 ('falcon'); 41 ('cow' and 'bull calf'); o.o. do. 5, 20; yürüğ taş 'white stone' Toy. 5 (ETY II 57), a.o.o.: Uyğ. VIII ff. D 1 erinç like erki and erken, q.v., a very archaic der. f. of 1 er-; its particular function (see v. G. ATG, para. 359) seems to be to make statements in which it is included less than categorical, and it is usually best translated 'presumably, supposedly', and the like. N.o.a.b. Türkü viii (their xâğans were wise and tough) buyrukt: yeme: bilge: ermiş erinç alp ermiş erinç 'their officers, too, were presumably wise and tough' . . . an: üçün éliğ ança: tutmuş erinç 'and for this reason apparently they thus held the realm' IE 3, II E 4; a whole string of similar phr. follows IE 5, II E 5, 6; IE 11, II E 10; o.o. IE 24, II E 20 (ol); IE 26; II E 35; Ix. 23 (ülüg): Uyg. viii ff. Bud. (I have done evil) bilip kıldım erinç 'but not, I think, done it knowingly' U II 87, 59; kapım xan bođun tillje korkup inça yarlıkadı erinç 'my father the xan apparently gave this order because he feared what the people might say' PP 11, 1-3; o.o. do. 10, 1; 45, 5; Xak. xi erinç a Particle (harf) meaning la'alla 'perhaps', hence one says of keldi: erinç 'he has perhaps come' Kaş. I 132; similar entry, but bardı: 'he has (perhaps) gone' III 449; o.o. I 46, 20 (kanık); III 65, 12 (uğra:ğ): 245, 18; 309, 11: KB ölüm buzmağınça buzulmaz erinç 'until death destroys him, he will presumably not be destroyed' 882; o.o. 2062-4, 3739.

D urunç 'bribe'; the only modern survival is SW xx Anat. örünç SDD 1118, noted in one village only as örünç can be assumed that this is a mispronunciation, the obvious explanation of this word is to take it as a Dev. N. fr. urun- in the sense of 'something put down'. Cf. urunçak. Xak. xi urunç al-rişwa 'a bribe' Kaş. I 132; III 449 (duplicate entries); o.o. I 354, 9 (1 aç-); III 217, 1: KB urunç alsa häcib bolur beg külinç 'if the minister takes bribes, the ruler becomes a laughing-stock' 2442; urunç almosa (so read) 'he should not take bribes' 2506; o.o. 2443, 4144; xiv Muh.(?) al-rişwa urunç Rif. 188 (only; also raşwa wa barjala 'to bribe' (Hend.) urunç-la- 109); al-rişwa 'to bribe' urı:ncılamak Mel. 39, 3; Rif. 126.

D orna:ğ Conc. N. fr. orna-; 'place, seat'. A rare word which survives only in NC Kir. orno: described by Yud. as the N.A.C. of orna- and possibly NE Tel. urna 'insert, insertion' R I 1667. Uyg. viii ff. Bud. arığ simek orunda söğüt altında [tüne]riğ ornağ tutunmuş erür 'he took for himself a dark(?) seat under a tree in a place in the jungle' USp. 105, 10-12: Civ. ig ağıriğ ornağ tutkair 'diseases (Hend.) promptly occupy the place' TT I 167-8; xiv Chin.-Uyg. Dict. chuang 'bed' (Giles 2,778) lornuğ (sic) R I 1064; ornuk Liğeti 188 (the latter could be a Dev. N./A. in -uk (Pass.) from orna-).

erpe:k 'finger'. Survives only as ergek in most NE languages including Khak. and Tuv., elsewhere displaced by barmak (parmak) which is noted in this meaning in all medieval languages:—Muh., Çağ., Xwar., Kom., Kıp., and Osm. Türkü viii ff. Man. on yılan başlığ ergekin 'with ten snake-headed fingers' Chuas. 54: Uyg. viii ff. Man. erpeki 'her fingers' M II 11, 22: Bud. atsız erpek 'ring finger', kiçliğ erpek 'little finger', qrtun erpek 'middle finger', yanar erpek 'index finger', uluğ erpek 'thumb' TT V 8, 54-7; 119-20; suk epreki (sic) 'index finger' U II 46, 71-2 (eg-); a.o. TM IV 253, 65-6: Civ. uluğ erpek TT VII 37, 12 (USp. 42, 11): Xak. xi ernek al-işbi 'finger', dialect form of erpe:k Kaş. I 104; erpe:k (sic, in chap. containing dissyllables) al-işbi I 121 (prov.); o.o. I 248, 5 (oğrul-); III 130 (1 su:k); III 443 (sörple-): ix Rğ. ernekler ucında 'at the tips of the fingers' R I 787; Muh.(?) ra'su'l-işbi 'finger-tip' erpe:k (spelt in error with qâf) Rif. 141 (only): Çağ. xv ff. ernek anguşt ki ba-'arabi 'ibarat az banân bâğad' 'finger', which is one meaning of banân in Ar. San. 37v. 5 (in 121r. 25 anguşt is also used to translate barmak).

ʔD er-in- (?er-in-) 'to be lazy, indolent'; morphologically a Refl. f. but with an inexplicable semantic connection with ermegü:. S.i.a.m.l.g. as er-in-/er-in-/ir-in which suggests an original er-in-. See also erincığ. Türkü VIII ff. *Man. VU?D uruğu 'flag, standard'. Although it is common in the early period as an element in P.N.s, there is no early occurrence as a N., but see uruğuluğ. The medieval words below are clearly related, and may even be intended to represent this actual word since in these texts ğayn is occasionally used to represent ŋ. A l.-w. in Mong. as oroñga, same meaning (Kov. 449, Haltod 83). In spite of this vocalization this word must surely be a contracted Conc. N. fr. urun- in the sense of 'something set up'. Cf. uruğut. Türkü VIII ff. the Miran MS. (ETY II 64 ff.) is full of P.N.s in which uruğu: occurs 13 times (a) at the beginning of a name, e.g. uruğu: tođun (title) çığşı: (title) A.3; (b) at the end e.g.

külüğ: uruğu: A.7; (c) in the middle, e.g. Küre:bir (tribal name) uruğu: sağun (title) Br.9; from the contexts it is clearly neither a title nor a tribal name: O. Kir. 1x ff. (inscription starts) alp uruğu totok ben 'I am Alp Uruğu: Totok (title)' Mal. 16, 1; körtle: xan alp uruğu: P.N. do. 10, 5; uruğu: külüğ tok böğ: (i.e. terken-ke:?) 2 es- 'to stretch' esp. a rope, cord, and the like. Survives only(?) in NE Tuv. At some unknown date a verb eş- 'to twist, twist together, tie' appeared, and some later user of the MS. of Kaş. became so confused between the two that he altered the S which precedes this verb, 1 es- and 1, 2 us- to Ş and also this verb to eş- and esil-, eşiş- to eşil-, eşiş-. The two verbs are/however, clearly different, since Pal. 577 distinguishes between es-, Infjn. ezer, 'to pull (meat off a bone, a pot off the fire)' and eş-, Infjn. ejer 'to twist'. The earliest references to (4) eş- 'to twist', which s.i.a.m.l.g., are Xwar. xiv Qutb 61; Kom. xiv CCG; Gr.; and Çağ. xv ff. Vel. 60; San. 104v. 26. Xak. xi ol yişiş esdi: madda'l-habl 'he stretched the rope' (etc.) Kaş. I 165 (ese:r, esme:k).

os- the early existence of this verb, which is practically syn. w. üz- depends on the question whether osul- and osğuç, q.v., have been correctly read in TM IV 253. It survives only(?) in NC Kzx. os- 'to cut, carve; to wound, scratch deeply'; the other references to it are as follows. Çağ. xv ff. os- (spelt) güşt az ustuxwân pâk hardan 'to scrape meat off a bone'; it cannot be used in isolation, the word 'bone' must be mentioned San. 74v. 23: Kıp. xv nahata 'to cut, hew' (yön-; in the margin in another hand) os-Tuh. 37a. 10.

VU 1 us- 'to be thirsty'. Survives perhaps in SE Türki usa-jussa-Shaw; Yarring; ussu-BŞ, unless these are Sec. f.s of suvsas-äs-üs-üsü- are of süs-. Uyğ. viii ff. Bud. Survives only(?) in SW xx Anat. SDD 1421. Oğuz xi men ayla: usdum kadâ zanantu 'I thought thus' Kaş. I 166 (usar:r, usma:k): (Xak.) xiv Muh. (?) qaşada 'to intend' us-Rif. 114; al-qaşd usmak (unvocalized) 120: Osm. xiv us- 'to think, consider' in two texts TTS I 729; II 933.

F ös- 'to grow' a common Mong. verb (Haenisch 128, Kovv. 514) which s.i.a.m.l.g. as a Mong. l.-w., and is earlier noted as below. In the only two passages in which it has been read in Uyğ. viii ff. Bud. it is clearly an error, in U II 10, 24 for 1 ür-, q.v., and in Sw. 566, 3 where the correct reading is üzgen yağmur tökülür 'the destructive rain, pours down'; a similar phr. is correctly transcribed in U I 26, 15 (Suv. 517, 4). The only reason for doubting that this is a Mong. l.-w. arises in connection with PU ösür-, q.v.; if this is correctly read it might be a Caus. f. of ös-, but it is prob. an error. Çağ. xv ff. ös- ma'luf şudan wa 'adat kardân 'to be accustomed to (something)' San. 74v. 24 (quotn., an erroneous translation derived from a misinterpretation of the quotn. tuğgan ösgen yérîm 'the place where I was born and grew up' not 'to which I am accustomed'): Kom. xiv 'to grow, increase in size' ös- CCG; Gr. 184 (quotn.): Kıp. xv ös-tala'a'l-binâ awî'l-şacar wa bi-ma'nâ turubbâ 'of a building or tree, to rise, grow taller; to be brought up' Kac. 9, 6; şabba wa tāla 'to grow, get taller' (uzan- and) ös-Tuh. 21b. 11; a.o. 24a. 1: Osm. xvii ös- 'to grow up' TTS I 749 (üs-).

asur- 'to sneeze'. It is surprising that this is the oldest form of what is presumably an onomatopoeic verb, which became axsur- in the medieval period and s.i.m.m.l.g. mainly in the latter or similar forms like apsir- (NE) and apsir- (NW, SW). A similar verb öksür- 'to cough' was common in the medieval period and also s.i.s.m.l., sometimes metathesized to öskür-. Uyğ. VIII ff. Civ. asursar 'if one sneezes' TT VII 35, 2 ff. PUD asırtku: Hap. leg.; this word occurs in a section containing trisyllables ending in a long vowel, following asurtğu: and ağartğu: which are headed by the letter -Ġ- and preceding emırġe: which is headed by the letter -K- or -G- (kāf); it is itself headed by the letter -K- (qāf), the spelling in the MS. asırtğuk is therefore obviously wrong and must be corrected to asırtku:. PU?F eşgürti: 'a kind of Chinese embroidered silk brocade'. There is some difficulty about the actual form of this word, of which the -ğ- is fixed by the Türkü spelling. The best evidence should be in Kaş. where it appears under the heading fa'lili; the form to be expected is eşgürti; but the MS. actually has eşgürtti. The word is fairly common in Uyg. Bud. and Civ. and is there consistently spelt eşgürti with minor variations of vocalization. The conclusion seems to be that it is a l.-w. of which the original form was eşgürtti: but that the -r- was not clearly pronounced and was sometimes omitted. VUD 2 işlen- (?işlan-) Refl. Den. V. fr. 21ş (?19); 'to be blackened with smoke'. Similar difficulties and confusions arise in regard to the vocalization and survival of this word as in the case of 2 iş, but broadly speaking it survives in the same languages and with the same phonetic changes. In Kaş. the position is further complicated by the fact that this verb, which probably had back vowels, and 1 işlen-, which almost certainly had front vowels, are treated in a single para., with the result that the Infin. is shown as -ma:k altered to -me:k or vice versa. In addition a later scribe familiar with modern forms of this verb like Osm. işlen- altered the -ş-s to -s-. Xak. XI ev (VU) 1:şlandı: lazıqal'-duxan bi'l-bayt wa asvadda minhu 'the smoke ay- (1) Intrans. 'to speak'; (2) 'to say, declare, prescribe (something Acc.)'; (3) 'to say' with the words said in oratio recta. There is little difference of meaning between ay-, tê:- and sözle:-, but at any rate in the earliest period ay- seems to be to some extent honorific, while the others are not. N.o.a.b.; apparently became obsolete when ayit-, q.v., came to mean 'to say', but in the transition period it is sometimes hard to say whether Perf. f.s represent ay- or ayit-. Türkü VIII öđ teprı: aysar 'when heaven prescribes the time' (all men are destined to die) IN 10; Toñuku(k)ka: baqa: aydı: . . . kıynığ köñüllüñçe: ay ben saqa: ne: ayayın: tédi: ('my xağan) spoke to me, Toñukuk; he said "prescribe the punishment as you think fit; what should I say to you (as a guide)?"' T 31-2: VIII ff. Man. teprı ayımsı ötçe bilğçe yorımadımız erser 'if we have not behaved in accordance with the advice and knowledge declared by God' Chuas. 326-8; (then a voice came from high heaven and) mêni okıdı inça tęp ayı: 'called me and said as follows' M III 23, 5(i): *Uyğ. D ayım I ay with 1st Pers. Poss. Suff.; lit. 'my moon', but often used, like teprim, as a Noun for 'beautiful, or distinguished, woman'; the transitional stage is seen in Kaş. where the Poss. Suff. still had its ordinary meaning but ay is already used metaphorically. Survives in SE Türki BŞ 10; NC Kir. and some SC dialects. Xak. XI sattu meniñ a:ymî: hâ'a xâdimî bi-ğayr idni 'he sold my servant without my permission' *Kaş. D oyma: Pass. Dev. N./A. fr. o:y-; s.i.a.m.l.g. usually meaning 'engraved or decorated work'. This seems to be the word used in a cryptic para. in Irkb about gambling. As in many Turkish games, the play consisted in putting pebbles or counters in 'holes' (I o:y in this para.) and oyma: er, which obviously means 'a gambler', might mean literally 'a man who makes holes for the game'. Türkü VIII ff. Irkb 29 (ur-).

D uyma: Pass. Conc. N. fr. uy-; n.o.a.b.; the ref. to 'felt boots' clearly links this word with the modern NC word uyuk 'felt boot, woollen stocking', and possibly with uyukluğ, q.v., and so fixes the vowel of this verb as u. Xak. XI uyma: al-libdu ('l-turkmâni') lladi yulaxaxd minhi'l-xuff 'the (Turkmen) felt out of which boots are made' *Kaş. ?F éyin (sic, as in TT VIII, not iyin as spelt hitherto) pec. to Uyğ. (but see I yır). Its meanings are discussed at length in v. G. ATG, para. 296; although sometimes used as an Adv. in such phr. as éyin keziğçe, it is normally a Postposn. following a noun in the unaffixed or Dat. case and meaning 'because of, according to, in accordance with', and the like. It is therefore practically syn. w. the Khotanese Saka Postposn. ini, see S. Konow, Primer of Khotanese Saka, para. 95, and is prob. a l.-w. fr. that word. This is more satisfactory than v. PUD uyar this word has been read in two O. Kır. IX ff. and one Türkü VIII ff. Yen. inscription, Mal. 10, 17, 28; for the text of the last see E ınılgü:. This last passage and Mal. 10, 2 yüz er kadaşım uyarın üçün stand together; in both uyar could be an Aor. of u- used as a Noun to mean 'ability'; 'because of the ability of my hundred kinsmen' and, in 28, 4, 'because of the ability of my elder and younger brothers', but in that case the word might well be uyur, q.v. This explanation does not suit Mal. 17 where the word has been read three times uyar kađınım üçün 17, 2; uyar begimke: . . . uyar kadaşımka: 17, 3; this text is a very unsatisfactory one, and it would not be too difficult, epigraphically speaking, to correct the word to öz:; 'for the sake of my own relations by marriage'; (I have been parted from) 'my own beg . . . and my own kinsmen': Talas IX ff. (?) Talas II 5 (see özge:).

D uyur presumably Aor. of u- used as a Noun; 'capable, powerful' and the like, cf. uğan and see uyar. Türkü VIII ff. (the xan mounted the throne and established his court) tört buluntıdaki edğüs:l: uyu:rı: téri:il:pen meñ:leyü:r beđ:zleyü:r 'his good and capable men in all quarters of the world assemble, rejoice and adorn (his court)' İrkB 28: Uyğ. üyür some kind of small seed, 'millet' or the like. The Brahmi (TT VIII) spelling uyuri would normally be read ür or uyarı but is the only convenient way of writing üyür in this alphabet. In the Uyğ. script the word is sometimes spelt üyür, sometimes ıyur and sometimes uyr, ?for üy(ii)r. The Xak. form ügür is unexpected and prob. represents the same word in a different dialect. There is disagreement about the meaning of kaz üyüri:; Müller in a note in Pfahl. 14 says that in an unpublished text (T III 56-4) it corresponds to Chinese su mo 'Perilla ocymoides' (Giles 10,320 7,969), and v. G. in a note in TT VIII 68 that in Suv. 476, 12 it corresponds to Chinese chieh tzu 'mustard seed' (Giles 1,525 11,317). N.o.a.b. Uyğ. 1 öz basically the intangible part of human personality 'spirit' as opposed to the tangible body, hence the early compound word etöz, q.v., 'a live body', lit. 'flesh and spirit'; from this it came usually to mean no more than 'self' (generally with Poss. Suffs.), but sometimes 'the interior part of an organism, pith, marrow', and the like. It is not always easy to catch the exact sense in some passages, but 'self' is the commonest meaning, and often in this sense it is combined with kentü, usually as kentü: öz, less often öz kentü. An ancient word surviving in Çuv. as var 'centre, middle', Ash. V 166. S.i.a.m.l.g., but rare in NE where it is ös/üs. Türkü VIII öz 'self' is very common, esp. in the forms özüm 'I myself' and özi: 'he himself'; in II S 11 çintan içaç kelüriz öz yar[gap] 'bringing sandalwood trees . . . ' it perhaps means 'the heart wood of a tree'; in T 34 bilige: Toñukuk añi:ğ ol öz ol (see añi:ğ) it is prob. an error for uz: VIII ff. öz 'self', with Poss. üzeñü: (or üzeñgü:?) 'stirrup'. S.i.a.m.l.g., including Çuv. yārana Ash. V 91. The original form is uncertain, but the first is the likelier. This is basically the NE form, the variants in Et I 889, etc. being ezene/izeze/izepi/üzeze/üzeñi/üzöñö; elsewhere the form is üzeñgi or the like, but this sound change is not unusual in these languages. INITIAL LABIAL PLOSIVES

Preliminary note. The initial labial sounds in the Turkish languages were discussed at length in a paper of that name (Studies, p. xvii) and the conclusions there reached are summarized in Studies, pp. 171-2. Briefly they are as follows: (1) there were originally in pre-viii Turkish both voiced and unvoiced initial labial plosives, b- and p-, but the latter had disappeared nearly everywhere by viii, and is now found only in a few words in some languages in the Oğuz group, which was unusually conservative in some matters; (2) contrary to this tendency, some Oğuz languages converted the initial b- in three words ba:r, ba:r-, and bé:r-, and words derived from them into v- at an early date; (3) m- was not an initial sound in native Turkish words in pre-viii Turkish, but evolved by a process of retrogressive assimilation in most languages, probably during viii, in words containing a nasal sound later in the word. In this case, too, the Oğuz languages were conservative and retained the original b-, which is also found sporadically in Türkii viii, and viii ff. Yen., and in Uyğ. viii, Şu. only. Where the later nasal was n or ŋ the position is quite clean, 'T' is ben in the languages just mentioned and men elsewhere. But where the nasal was m the position is confused by the fact that in most words this m had become y before the word comes to our notice. Exceptionally we can be sure that 'dung' was bañak* because, in addition to the Uyğ., Xak., etc. form mayak, Kaş. records an Oğuz form baynak, but in the case of a word like muğgak the original form buñgak* can only be inferred.

In the present section all words are indexed with initial b-; where there is evidence from the Oğuz languages that it was originally p-, (p-), or in doubtful cases (?p-) is added after the word. Where a word containing a nasal is noted only with initial m-, it is indexed in that form, but the original form with initial b-* is listed here with a cross-reference, but where the original b- survives somewhere, even if only in a modern language it is indexed in that form.

Salemann, who was unaware of the etymology and true meaning of this word, suggested that it was a l.-w. fr. Sogdian p'şyk 'hymn', a word which does exist as a l.-w. in Turkish, see paştık, and Benveniste accepted this in Journal asiatique, vol. 236, 2, p. 184, but it is an error. N.o.a.b. It was displaced in the medieval period by oruç noted in (Xak. XIII(?) Tef. 239; XIV Muh. Mel. 27, 15; Rif. 111; Kom. XIV CCI, CCG; Gr. 179 (quoting); Kıp. XV Tuh. 68b. 9 and Osm. Survives only(?) in NE Tel. piçıu; SC biçik 'the cut of a garment' R IV 1318. Xak. XI biçığ (misvocalized baçığ) al-miṭāq wa'l-ahd 'contract, agreement'; hence one says ol menip birle: biçığ (sic) kıldı: 'āhada mā'i 'he made an agreement with me' Kaş. I 371: XIII(?) Tef. biçığ translates al-'ahd and biçığ kil- 'ahida 93 (unvocalized; Borovkov, misled by the main entry in Kaş., transcribed as baçığ).

D biçuk Pass. N./A.S. fr. biç-; properly 'cut', but usually 'half', cf. yarım. The word is unvocalized in Kaş., but was prob. still spelt biçuk; in the medieval period it tended to become buçuk by regressive assimilation. Survives in SE Türki puçuk 'snub-nosed' Şav 58; ditto and 'with broken edges' BŞ 127; a piece; dilapidated' Jarring 232, and SW Osm. buçuk 'half'. Xak. XI biçuk(?) D biçga:k Dev. N. (Conc. N.) fr. biç-; lit. 'something cut off', 'segment', and the like, with various particular applications. In some languages, even Uyg. (see buçğaksız), became buçgak by labial assimilation at a very early date. Survives in Kaş's last meaning in NE Şor pişkak; Tel. piçkak R IV 1318-22; Tuv. bişkak; SE Türki puçkak BŞ 127 and NC Kır. buçkak and for 'corner' and the like in several NW and SW languages as bucak/buçak. D biçğas: der. fr. biç-; for the meaning cf. biçığ. There is no doubt that Kaş. intended the word to be spelt in this way, it is placed with hekmes and kırbaş in a section headed -S, but there is no other known word with the Suffix. -ğas and it may be a Sec. f. of -ğaç dissimilated fr. the preceding -ç-. Xak. XI biçğas al-'ahd wa'l-miṭāq bayna'l-qawm wa ğayrihim 'an agreement or contract between (the members of) a tribe, etc.' Kaş. I 459 (verse); XIV Muh.(?) al-maxāṭira 'danger(?)' biçğuş (sic?) Rif. 189.

bat Preliminary note. There is no doubt about the existence of an Adv. bat (?pat) which was originally a pure onomatopoeic (see Kaş.), and came to mean 'quickly' and the like. There is no reason to doubt the authenticity of a second bat noted in Kaş., and prob. surviving in NC Kir. Finally there are two or perhaps three early occurrences of what seems to be a different word which may survive in NE Tuv.

I bat (?pat) originally an onomatopoeic for the sound of a falling object hitting the ground, but normally used as an onomatopoeic meaning 'quickly, hurriedly'. Survives in NE Tuv. pat 'extremely' (e.g. tired) Pal. 328; SE Türki pat 'quickly, soon' Shaw, BŞ, Jarring; NC Kir. bat ditto; SC Uzb. bot ditto; SW Osm. pat ditto, and onomatopoeic. Uyg. VIII ff. Civ. (the child) bat tüşer 'is soon born' H I 23; bat edgü bolur 'he quickly recovers' do. 28; o.o. TT VII 28, 28 (oñal-); 28, 37: Xak. XI one says bat kel, like the expression (VU) şap kel in telling (someone) to hurry (bi'l-ısrā'); and for the sound (li-sawt) of anything light which falls bat tüşdi: ('it fell with a plop') Kaş. I 319: Çağ. xv ff. bat züd wa sarı 'quick, quickly (quoton.); bat bat züd züd San. 119v. 13: Xwar. XIII bat 'quickly' 'Ali 47.

2 bat perhaps survives in NE Kir. bat 'glue, paste'. Xak. XI bat al-tacir 'the thick juice of pressed dates' Kaş. I 319.

3 bat the first two quotns. below come fr. inscriptions of which the text is very dubious, but if rightly read may be the word which survives in NE Tuv. pat 'worthless, insignificant' Pal. 328; the third quotn. may have 1 bat in an unusual meaning. Türkü VIII (gap) yavız bat biz azıg üküşüg körtig er[siğ]ti: süle[h]m 'we are in a bad way and worth very little; you have seen how few (we are) and how many (they are); let us take the field bravely' Ongin 7: O. Kir. IX ff. (gap) bat ermiş öldim 'I was worthless and died' Mal. 10, 11; Uyg. VIII ff. Bud. (if a man has offended the begs and they contemplate killing or torturing him, their swords and saws(?) and whips break into small pieces and) neğ bat kılı umaz 'they cannot do him harm' (?) Kuan. 27.

bét 'the (human) face'. Rare in the early period being syn. w. 2 yüz: but survives with this and extended meanings, 'cheek, the surface (of water)', etc., as bét/bet in NC Kir, Kzx.; SC Uzb; several NW languages and in SW Osm. in the phr. bet beñiz 'completion'. Uyg. VIII ff. Bud. (tantric) bir yegirminç isak(?) atlıg uzık ol bétl üze urğu ol 'the eleventh is the letter called isak (?); one should put it on one's face' TT VII 41, 2-5: Çağ. xv ff. bet rü wa 'arid 'face, cheek' San. 119v. 19.

bit originally 'louse', but also used for 'bug' and other parasites, including those on stored products. S.i.a.m.l.g. Uyg. VIII ff. Man.-A tonnuğ bitl 'body (lit. clothes') louse' M I 8, 14: Xak. XI bit al-qaml 'louse'; and the worm (al-dūd) which attacks wheat is called tariğ bitl: Kaş. I 320: XIV Muh. al-qaml bit: Mel. 74, 6; Rif. 177: Kom. XIV 'louse' hit CCI; Gr.: Kip. XIII al-baqq wa'l-fasāfis 'bug' (kandala): Tkm. beşik bitl that is 'the cradle louse' (qamli'l-mahd) Hou. 11, 20 ff.: XIV bit al-qaml Id. 28; Bul. 11, 6: XV ditto Tah. 29a. 8.

I bo:d prob. originally 'stature, the size of a man'; but from the earliest period it also clearly means 'a clan', the Sing. of bođun, q.v.; the meaning underlying the latter is perhaps 'lineage' that is the size of a clan as a number of natural families. S.i.a.m.l.g.; in NE bot/pot/pos/poy, elsewhere usually boy, usually 'stature', but in NE 'self'; the meaning 'clan' is rare, but survives in SW Osm. See Doerfer II 812. Türkü VIII (the Türkü people (bođun) died, disintegrated, and were destroyed) Türkü şirl(?) bođun yerinte: bođ kalmadı: 'no clan remained in the country of the fortunate(?) Türkü people'

T 4; (if it had not been for Éltériş Kağan and myself) bođ yeme: bođun yeme: kişi: yeme: İdl: yok erteçi: ertli: 'there would not have been a clan or a people or (even) an individual' T 60: Uyg. (VIII bođ has been read in Su. E 10 and W 1 but in both places seems to be part of a longer word, in E 10 a place-name (?Boduklı) and in W 1 of bođun): VIII ff. Bud. körk meñiz öp bođ üze atkan-ğuluksuz üçün 'because of their freedom from attachment (to this world) in respect of perceptible qualities (Sanskrit viśaya) form and substance' Suv. 60, 6-8; a.o. do. 593, 20: Civ. bođka: tegmişte 'when he has grown to full stature' UŞp. 98, 20: Xak. DF bitlî:gü: Conc. N. fr. bitli-; survives only(?) in SE Türki pütükü 'document, nominal roll' BŞ 132. Xak. xi bitlî:gü: al-dawâ'u'l-turkiya wa gayruhâ 'the Turkish ink-pot and the like' Kaş. III 174.

PU?F bütü:ge: this seems to be the only Turkish word for 'egg-plant' which is not certainly a l.-w. All modern Turkish languages use some form of the Pe. word, sometimes in its form as a l.-w. in Russian baklazhan, except SE Türki which has çeyze a corruption of Chinese chia-tzü. This suggests that this word, too, is a l.-w., prob. Iranian. The use of büta in the translation in San. suggests that the author held this view. The Kıp. meaning, which prob. represents a different word, survives in NW Kaz. büteke/bütege 'bird's gizzard' R IV 1898. Xak. xi bütü:ge: al-bâdinâ'n 'egg-plant' *Kaş. D bođun Plur. or Collective f.(?) of 1 bođ; cf. eren; lit. 'clans', in practice a semi-technical term for 'an organized tribal community, a people', in the sense of a community ruled by a particular ruler; hence, esp. in such phr. as kara: bođun, 'the common people' in antithesis to the supreme ruler, and the subordinate tribal or clan rulers, the begs. Very common in the early period but n.o.a.b. Kağ. mentions a form boyun as current in languages in which -d- had become -y-, but there is no record of the word in this sense, although it is common meaning 'neck'. Türkü viii bođun is perhaps the commonest word in the inscriptions; it occurs (1) by itself; (2) in the expression used by a ruler bođunım 'my people'; (3) preceded by an ethnic name, which may be either Turkish or foreign, e.g. Türkü bođun 'the Türkü people'; Tavğaç bođun 'the Chinese people' (practically equivalent to 'the Chinese Empire') I S 4, 5 etc.; Soğdak bođun 'the Sogdian people' IE 39; (2) and (3) both occur in tokuz oğuz bođun kentü: bođunım erti: 'the Tokkuz Oğuz people were my own (subject) people' IN 4. badar (padar?) onomatopoeic for the sound of footsteps and the like. Survives only(?) in SW Osm., Tkm. patir patir, same meaning. Cf. English patter. Xak. XI badar badar yügürdi: adā wa sumi'a li-'adwihi hafifa(n) 'he ran and (the sound of) his footsteps was heard faintly' Kaş. I 360 (MS., in error, yadar yadar); a.o. I 349 (çalk).

F patir Sanskrit pātra 'a bowl', received through Sogdian p'ttr. N.o.a.b. Became a l.-w. in Mong. as badir (Kow. 1070); badar (Haltod 273) specifically for 'a monk's begging bowl'. Uyğ. VIII ff. Bud. (the Buddha said, 'my good Ānanda') patirimun (PU) sunçuğumın kötürğil 'take up my begging bowl and my (?)' T T X 124-5: Civ. bir patir ayak bor bir patir ayak suv birle 'one bowl of wine and one bowl of water' H I 16-17; öz patir bile on iki patir küncit aldım 'I have received twelve bowls of millet (measured) in my own bowl' USP. 27, 5-6.

PUF butar Hap. leg.; this is the first entry in the section headed -R and precedes badar; the first letter is undotted but must be bā and carries a damma, the second has two faint dots and is unvocalized; this section is not free from scribal errors (see badar) and judging by the meaning, it is likely that Kaş. actually wrote papur. Xak. XI butar tūtu'l-bardi 'the papyrus reed' Kaş. I 360.

S bütrü: See bütürü.

PU?F batrak 'flag, banner, standard'. First occurs in Uyğ. as part of the panoply of demons in association with various l.-w.s. of Sanskrit origin and probably itself a similar l.-w., possibly received through Sogdian. It has no obvious Turkish etymology, and its phonetic history is obscure. The Uyğ. alphabet is too ambiguous (b/p, d/đ/t) to make its Uyğ. pronunciation certain; the second vowel was rounded but this is unparalleled elsewhere. The Xak. spelling was certainly batrak, the main entry preceding that of buçgak; it was originally the same elsewhere, but some later user of the MS. added two dots below the tā, and this caused the spelling bayrak in the printed edition. By Çağ. the word had in fact become bayrak and this is the form in all modern SE, SC, NW, and SW languages in which the word survives; there must therefore have been, subsequent to Xak., an evolution batrak > badrak > bađrak > bayrak, the intermediate stages of which are lost. See Doerfer II 727, 824. Uyğ. VIII ff. Bud. (the demons holding in their hands) trzul (PU) batruk 'tridents (Sanskrit trīśūla) and flags' U IV 8, 9; trzul (PU) batruk vjirlüğ tokimāk 'tridents, flags, thunderbolt (vajra) maces' do. 8, 39-40; trzul (PU) batruk çkir bindipal 'tridents, flags, wheels (cakra), and lances (bhīndipāla)' do. 20, 236-7: Xak. XI batrak 'a lance (maṭraḍa) with a piece of silk at its head which a champion uses as a badge (yatasawwam) on the day of battle' Kaş. I 465; ağdi: kızıl batrak 'the red flag (al-'alam) was raised' III 183, 6; a.o. II 205, 2 (talpış-): Çağ. xv ff. bayrak (spelt) 'alam-i küçik 'a small flag'; also 'the winning-post' (qaşabu'l-sabq) in a race San. 128r. 6.

VUD bođrak Hap. leg. in a rather well-preserved inscription. Mal. identifies this with a Çağ. word botrak (P. de C. 161, not in San.) 'scattered', but this is impossible since that word is der. fr. botra- which is not Turkish but a corruption of Mong. bōte'ere (Kow. 1231, Haltod 309). Perhaps der. fr. l bo:đ, but -rak is normally attached to Adjs. not Nouns. O. Kir. IX ff. (I have been parted) biñ bođrak yuntım sizime: 'you, my thousand sturdy(?) horses' Mal. 45, 8.

?F bitrik pec. to Xak.; no doubt the basic meaning is 'pistachio nut' and a l.-w. fr. some Iranian language, cf. Pe. pistih. Xak. XI bitrik bazru'l-mar'a 'clitoris'; Arğü. XI bitrik al-fustuq 'pistachio nut' Kaş. I 476.

F bađram 'merriment' and the like, hence 'a feast'. No doubt an Iranian l.-w., cf. Pe. bađrām 'a delightful place' (Steingass). S.i.a.m.l.g. except NE as bayram (in NC Kir. mayram; Kzx. méyram) as the Turkish equivalent of Arabic al-'id 'a (Moslem) feast'. See Doerfer II 823. Xak. xı bađram al-surı̄r wa'l-dahika bayna'l-qawm 'general merriment and laughter', and the ground (al-ard) when it is covered with flowers and blossoms, is called bađram ye:r arđ nazı̄ha 'pleasant ground'; I do not know what its origin (aşluhu) is because I have heard it from the lips of Persians (al-furs), but the Oğuz call 'the (Moslem) feast day (yawma'l-'id) bayram that is 'a day of pleasant merriment'; the -d- being changed to -y- as is their custom; it is a genuine word (luğa mahda, i.e. pure Turkish?) in this sense Kaş. I 484; a.o. I 263, 11 (avın-): XIII(?) Tef. bayram 'religious feast' 89: Çağ. xv ff. bayram al-'id San. 128r. 7 (quotn.; also 'a kind of cotton fabric like İraqı̄ linen but finer' (quotn.); there is no other trace of this meaning): Oğuz xı bayram al-'id; I reckon that it is an alteration of the popular word (qawlu'l-nās) bađram meaning 'merriment and enjoyment'; the (Moslem) feast day is a day of merriment. The pagans do not have a feast day or consequently a word for it; if there was one, all the Turks would know it, but the only ones who know this (word in this sense) are those who have turned -d- into -y- in their language Kaş. III 176: Xwar. xiv bayram 'the (Moslem) feast' MN 20, etc.

D batruş Hap. leg.?.; presumably a Dev. N./A. fr. I batur-, but there is no obvious semantic connection. Xak. xı batruş su:v al-mā'nul-kadı̄r 'muddy water'; and also macaroni (al-ı̄rriya) when it contains too much flour and too little water Kaş. I 459.

D bütürü: Ger. fr. bütür- used as an Adv.; 'completely', etc. N.o.a.b.; cf. büte: Uyğ. VIII ff. Bud. eözüm kögüüm bütürü öğürüp sevinip 'my body and mind were completely delighted (Hend.)' Hüen-ts. 296-7; Xak. XI KB bütürü 'thoroughly, completely' is fairly common, e.g. (the sun raised its head, and disclosed its face again) ajun bütürü tuttu ürüg kuş öpl 'the world completely assumed the colour of a white bird' 5828; o.o. 71, 193, 3949, 4420, 4961; there is also a Comparative f. ayıtta bu häcib sözün yétrürek tileki ne ermiş takı bütürük 'the Chancellor questioned him about his statement most searchingly (asking) more fully what his wishes were' 507.

PUD buturğak Dev. N. in -ğak (connoting habitual action); there is no verb butur- and this would be much more easily explained as tuturğak der. fr. tutur- but R IV 1857 records a NC Tara word buturğak 'a tree which has split and is bound round to save it from collapse', so the form may be correct although Radloff's Tara entries are rather suspect. Xak. XI buturğak 'a thorn tree (şavh) shaped like a pistachio tree (al-fustuq), which has thorns (ma'aliq) which catch the clothing, etc. Kaş. I 502.

(PU)D budurs:n 'quail, Coturnyx'; as such Hap. leg., but obviously connected with the later words for 'quail' assembled below. Kaş. does not contemplate the existence of Turkish words containing six consonants and a long vowel, and it is possible that the original form was buldurs:n*, which links with the later forms and perhaps explains the intervocalic -d-, very rare in Xak.; -s:n is a very rare Suff. but may have the same relation to -ç:n, which occurs as a Suff. of other names of birds, as -sil to -çil. The later form survives in SW Az. bıldırç:n; Osm. bıldırç:n, but all other modern languages use some form of Mong. büdiine (Kov. 1230, Haltod 312). Xak. XI budurs:n al-salwā 'quail' Kaş. I 513 (verse çaklın-); translated al-summāni 'quail': (Çağ. xv ff. kerek (spelt; otherwise unknown) 'a bird smaller than a grey partridge', called salwā in Ar. and bıldırç:n in Turkish San. 300r. 28; n.m.e. (F) bağa:tur by origin almost certainly a Hunnish (Hsiung-nu) Proper Name, and more specifically that of the second Hsiung-nu shan-yü (209-174 B.C.) whose name was transcribed by the Chinese as Mao-tun (Giles 7,699 12,221; Old Chinese prob. something like moğ-tun). The word occurs only once in the early period and then still as a P.N. but was an early l.-w. in Mong. as ba'atur (Haenisch 11) bağatur (Kov. 1058), primarily as an element in P.N.s, e.g. Yesigei Ba'atur (Haenisch 184) but also as a common noun meaning 'picked warrior'. It is prob. that the transition from name to noun took place in Mong.; Turkish had other words like alpa:ğut with this meaning. The word reappears in Turkish in the medieval period generally in forms with medial -h- which suggest that the immediate source was Pe. S.i.s.m.l. in SE, NC, SC, and NW as batır/batur, R IV 1511-15, which seem to be direct borrowings fr. Mong. D baka:ñak Den. N. fr. baka-; 'the frog' in a horse's hoof (the metaphor is the same as in English). Survives with the same meaning, and for 'one half of a cloven hoof' in NC Kir., Kzx. bakay and SW Osm. bakanak. In Kaş. the word is in a Chapter listing words containing -y-, and the original spelling must have been bakay:yak but in both places a dot has been put over the yā' in addition to the two below it, no doubt by someone familiar with the Osm. pronunciation; in the second occurrence this letter carries a damma instead of a fatha. Uyġ. viii ff. Man. (long gap) bakanak turkurup (long gap) TT IX 82: Xak. xi baka:yak mā bayn zilfay hull dī zilf wa ahad şiqqayī 'l-zilf 'the part within the cloven hoof of any animal with cloven hooves, and one half of a cloven hoof': baka:yak (so read) nusūr hawāfirī 'l-xayl 'the frog in a horse's foot' *Kaş. buğra: 'a camel stallion'. The word was used as a P.N. by the Karakhanid dynasty and was an early l.-w. in Mong. as bu'ura (Haenisch 24) buğra (Kow. 1166). Survives only in SE Türki buğra Shaw; boğra/buğra/buğur farring; NC Kir. bu:ra (perhaps reborrowed fr. Mong.) and, until recently, SW Osm. buğur. For camel terminology generally see Shcherbak 103 ff. and *J.-P. Roux 'Le chameau en Asie centrale', C.A.F. VU biğriğ, boğrul Preliminary note. Although these words are vocalized differently in the MS, the translations make it clear that they are etymologically connected and the most probable explanation is that they are Dev. N.s fr. boğur-, Caus. f. of boğ-, which survives only in NE Sag. poğur - R IV 1266. A general connotation of 'throttling' is therefore indicated, but the precise meaning in this context of al-amt, which has several meanings, is obscure; possibly 'a bulge' (in the sense of something produced by excessive pressure) or 'overflowing'. It is not easy to connect the second meaning of boğrul with the first, semantically it is easier to connect with böğrül, q.v.

VUD boğruğ Hap. leg.; see above. Xak. XI boğruğ (MS. biğriğ) al-amt fi'l-ğirāra wa'l-waṭb wa nahvīhi 'a bulge(?) in a sack, milk-skin, or the like' Kaş. I 461.

VUD boğrul (?boğrul) Hap. leg.; see above. Xak. XI boğrul (rā unvocalized) al-amt fi'l-wi'ā'l-mal'ān wa'l-waṭb (MS. in error tabb) wa nahvīhi 'a bulge(?) in a full food-bag, milk-skin, or the like'; boğrul (so vocalized) ko:y al-ğanamul-lhādī ibyaḡda halquhu 'a sheep with a white throat' Kaş. I 481.

VU'D bağram Hap. leg.; so vocalized, but etymologically it could be a N.S.A. of buğra- meaning 'notched' that is 'in ridges'. Xak. XI bağram kum al-ramlu'l-ālicu'l-cubayl 'sand heaped in layers and small hills'; the sands between Kāşğar and Yārkend are called bağram kumr: (sic) Kaş. I 484.

S buğar- See buğra-.

D bokur- Hap. leg.; Caus. f. of bok- with the connotation of drawing in or contracting something. Xak. XI ol at teğrinden bokurdi: haṭṭa min qimati'l-faras wa ġayrahi bi'l-muḡabbāt aw ġayrihi 'he reduced the price of the horse (etc.) as a personal favour or for some other reason'; also used for anything that you bring down from its place (haṭṭa min mahallihi) Kaş. II 82 (bokurur, bokurma:k).

VU buğra- the relationship between the two forms of this verb is morphologically obscure; both are n.o.a.b., but the first seems to be an earlier form of NW Kaz. bura- 'to fashion (logs); to build (a house) out of fashioned logs'. They have no connection with buğra:ğur, q.v. Xak. XI ol yiğa:çığ buğra:di: hazza'l-xaşab 'he carved, cut incisions or dovetails, in the wood' (etc.) Kaş. III 277 (buğra:r, buğrama:k): ol yiğa:ç buğardi: hazza fi'l-xaşab 'he made incisions or dovetails, in the wood'; the original form (aşluhu) was buğra:di: Kaş. II 80 (buğaru:r, buğarma:k).

VU bukra- Hap. leg.; this is prob. the correct form of this verb, the -ı- in the Perf. seems to be a scribal error caused by the form of the preceding verb. Xak. XI at suç:di: bukrı:di: (sic) waṭaba'l-faras wa camaḡa 'the horse reared up and ran away'; this verb is used only in the Hend. D bağırçak Conc. N. fr. bağır; survived until recently in SW Osm. Sami 269; R IV 1452 meaning 'the point of junction of the pole or shafts with the body of a wagon'. Xak. XI bağırçak akāşu'l-ħimār 'a donkey's pack-saddle' Kaş. I 502.

VU buğurda: (of hair) 'curly'; the form is certain since it follows a cross heading -D-, but morphologically obscure and with a foreign look. Survives as buysra in NC Kir.; NW Kk., Nog., and SW Tkm. and as bödre in SE Türki; NW Tat. Xak. xi buğurda: sağ al-şa'ru'l-ca'd 'curly hair' Kaş. I 488.

D bağırdağ Conc. N. fr. bağır; translations vary but the general concept is one of a garment or wrapping to protect the liver; bağıldak which first appears in the medieval period is a Sec. f. Both survive in SW Osm. only(?) meaning 'swaddling clothes, a girth to hold a baby in the cradle', etc. See Doerfer II 750. Xak. xi bağırdağ şudratul-mar'a 'a woman's bodice' *Kaş. D bağırılık 'sand grouse'; presumably Dev. N. fr. bağırila:-, but the semantic connection is not apparent. Survives in SE Türki bağıltak 'the large sand grouse, Pterocles ahenarius' Shaw 210, which is a later form of XVII bağırtak 'Tibetan short-toed sand grouse, Syraptus tibetanus in the 'Five Language Mirrors', see E. D. Ross, 'A polyglot list of birds in Turki, Manchu and Chinese' Monographs of the Asiatic Society of Bengal II 9, Calcutta, 1909, p. 287 (the sound change -l- > -t- suggests an origin further north-west) and in SW Osm. bağırtlak (sic) 'the sand grouse Tetrao alchata; the black grouse, Tetrao tetrix' Redhouse 330; boğurtlak (sic) kuşu 'a kind of partridge (çil)' Sami 316. Xak. xi bağırılık al-qatāt 'sand grouse, Pterocles' *Kaş. F bağışı: l.-w. fr. Chinese po-shih (Giles 9,072 9,909; Ancient Chinese bāk-ši) (Buddhist) 'religious teacher'; an early l.-w. in this sense in Mong., occurring in the two A.D. 1352 hP'ags-pa inscriptions where it is spelt bağıši, not baxşı (the alphabet distinguishes clearly between these two sounds) and still surviving in this form but with rather altered meanings (Haltd 272). As bağışı: is the most probable pronunciation of the Chinese phr. at the date when it was borrowed, the word was prob. so pronounced in Uyğ., where it is common, but as -ğş- is not a possible combination in pure Turkish words (see Studies, p. 160) it no doubt fairly soon became baxşı: There is no trace of the word between Uyğ. and Kom. XIV/ Çağ. XV ff., and it is prob. that when it reappeared it had been reborrowed fr. Mong.; by this time it meant 'a scribe' and more specifically 'a scribe able to write in the Uyğ. (or rather Mongolian official) alphabet' (see Studies, pp. 175 ff.). F beğ originally 'the head of a clan, or tribe, a subordinate chief', and the like. C.i.ä.p.a.l. from the earliest period, but almost certainly a l.-w. fr. Chinese po 'the head of a hundred men' (Giles 9,358; 'Ancient Chinese' (Karlgren) puh). Survives with some phonetic changes (b-/p-; -e/-é-; -ğ/-y) and alterations in meaning parallel to the alterations in social structure; e.g. in the Ottoman Empire it came to mean 'a junior administrative officer' and finally hardly more than a complimentary title given to members of the gentry. See Doerfer II 818, 828. Türkü viii beğ is very common; the Türkü 'realm' (é:l) consisted of the xoğan and his ministers and officials, begler 'the begs' (one of the very rare uses of the Plur. Suff. in Türkü) and bođun, 'the tribes, clans, common people'; in the opening address in I S 1-2; II N 1-2 the xoğan's own family, bođunım, various kinds of begs and finally Tok(k)uz Oğuz begleri: bođunı: are addressed; viii ff. beğ is common in İrkB, e.g. in 5 beğ er 'a chief' went to inspect his studs: Yen. beğ occurs several times as the title of the person commemorated: Uyğ. viii beğ and begler occur several times:

1 bö:ğ 'a poisonous spider, tarantula'. Survives in NC Kzx. büyü/büyü; NC Kumyk mıya; Nogay biy; SW Osm. böy/böye (now obsolete?); Tkm. mö:y. Arabic al-tağat is not the usual word for 'spider' and prob. means 'poisonous spider'. The Kip. translation 'scorpion' (normally ça:dan) is odd, and perhaps an error. Cf. örümçek. Xak. xı bö:ğ al-tağat 'a (poisonous) spider' in one of the two languages (i.e. Xak. and Oğuz?) *Kaş. 1 бүк 'thicket' and the like. Survives in NE бүк/пүк several dialects R IV 1394, Khak., Tuv., and SW Osm. бүк; the origin of the entry бүк 'forest' in P. de C. 173 is obscure, it does not occur in earlier Çağ. authorities. Xak. XI бүк al-acama 'a thicket, brushwood' Kağ. I 333; o.o. I 233, 27; 245, 3 (örtel-); 260, 12 (örtet-); Kip. XIV бүк al-ğāba 'thicket' İd. 34; Osm. XIV ff. бүк 'thicket' in two XIV texts and several XVIII dict. TTS I 132; II 186; III 123; IV 139.

бөг- 'to collect, gather together (people or things)' and in particular 'to collect, or dam up (running water)'. Survives in NC Kır. бөгө-; Kzx. бөге- 'to dam up (water); to block (a road)' and SW xx Anat. бөге-/böye-/büge 'to dam up' SDD 224-8, 237. 1 бүк- Kağ. gives two meanings (1) 'to bend, bow', and the like (Intrans.); (2) 'to feel aversion, be revolted by (something Abt.)', but later usages and the Pass. f. бүкүл- show that it was a Trans. V. w. the Object sometimes understood. S.i.a.m.l.g., usually in the first sense but w. an Object stated. Exceptionally NC Kır. distinguishes between бүк- 'to bend' and бөкө- 'to feel aversion', but it is unlikely that this reflects a genuine original phonetic difference between two verbs with different meanings. Cf. yükün-. Xak. XI ol meni: көрүп бүкди: 'when he saw me he cleaved to the ground and was humble, hiding himself' (laṭā bi'l-arḍ wa'n-xafāda mutakammīna(n)); and one says ol aşım бүкди: 'he was revolted (şabi'a) by the food, so that he loathed it and was disgusted'; and one says ol tavarka: бүкди: translated 'his eye was filled (imtala'a) with wealth, etc.', i.e. 'he was greedy for wealth' Kağ. II 18 (бүке:r, бүкме:k); увут бо:луп бүке: турди: translated 'he was ashamed so that he was humble and hid himself from the people and turned away from me' (adāni) III 231, 1; (KB the alternaböke: although Kağ. says that the primary meaning was 'a big snake' and that it was used metaph. of strong warriors the evidence points rather in the opposite direction. An early l.-w. in Mong. as bökö 'warrior, wrestler' (Haenisch 17); survives in this sense in NE pökö several dialects R IV 1299; bökö Russko-alt. slovar' (s.v. silach); SE Tar. böke R IV 1603-4 and perhaps NC Kır. bökö, but these may be reborrows fr. Mong. See Doerfer I 803. Түркү VIII lx. 17 (slp): Xak. XI böke: al-tu'bānu'l-'azim 'a big snake', it is said in the folk-tale (al-matāl) yét: başlığ yél böke: 'a snake with seven heads' (yél is unexplained, possibly 'demon', see 1 yél:); and warriors (al-abṭāl) are called by it, for example one of the great men (uzamā) of the Yabākū was called böke: (VU) Boḍraç (a long anecdote about his defeat by Arslan Tégin follows) Kağ. III 227; KB böke yolçılığ 'having a warrior as a guide' 2354; ay böke 3545; böke yavğusu 5523; Çağ. xv ff. böke a strong man and wrestler (pahlavān wa kuştı-gir) who defeats all his rivals' San. 138r. 1 ('wrestler' suggests a re-borrowing from Mong.; see also ai:la).

bögü: (bögö:) 'sage, wizard'; the word seems to connote both wisdom and mysterious spiritual power. An early l.-w. in Mong. as bö'e (Haenisch 16) böge (Kov. 1242, Haltdo 307) where it means 'a male shaman', as opposed to iduğan 'female shaman' (a purely Mong. word). Bögü: Kağan was the regnal title of one Түркү and one early Uyğur kağan.
